Chinese shipyards are full and still receiving orders. Cargo demand from China is as strong as ever and white goods leaving for Europe and the US remains robust. Chinese finance is still abundant and there is good appetite.

In general, shipping is in a good place. Demand for goods is strong, supply of ships is controlled although newbuild orders are accelerating, shipowners and operators have built liquidity over the last years and finance sources of all kinds are in good health with hardly any troubled financing.

Our annual Marine Money China Ship Finance Forum, held in Shanghai, has been a bridge between Chinese finance and global shipping from its humble beginnings to the powerhouse Chinese shipping finance represents today.

This one-day event brings together China's largest shipping finance houses, China's leading shipping and shipbuilding businesses and hundreds of international shipping and shipping finance professionals who are actively growing their business in China.

This year's 14th annual edition is the go-to conference for relationship building, industry insight and access to China's vibrant and growing shipping markets.
