

REMARKS
VICE PRESIDENT HUMPHREY
CLOSING CEREMONY OF THE
AIR FORCE ASSOCIATION EXHIBITS/DISPLAYS

*Sept. 14, 1966
Washington, D.C.*

I have been educated and delighted with the exhibits and briefings I have attended this morning. After observing these new developments, I can readily understand why we must continue to lead the world in technology. We can afford many things in this great country, but we cannot afford to be second best.

My only regret this morning is that I do not have the time to see each exhibit and hear every briefing. I have no doubt that those I didn't see are as impressive as those I did.

I particularly want to compliment the Air Force Association for having assembled here what must be as outstanding a display of technological progress as has been available anywhere at any time.

This is what makes this country the greatest -- private competitive enterprise operating in cooperation with the government.

The Air Force Association exhibit highlights American ingenuity, American technology, American productivity, and American patriotism.

Thank you again for the opportunity given me and my associates who have been so fortunate to have been here this morning.
