↳ We must ask our schools to teach our children the English language in all its variety;

↳ -- We must ask them to teach our children ~~computational~~ skills for this electronic age;

↳ -- We must ask our teachers to explore the techniques developed in our age -- programmed learning being developed in schools, universities and by private industry;

↳ -- We must ask them to examine and experiment with their curriculums to innovate programs enlisting the services of resource persons from the outer community -- parents as teacher aides, as consultants to teachers and students in the classrooms;

↳ -- We must ask our schools to teach our children to care for their physical beings;

↳ -- We must ask our schools to help youth to use his leisure time wisely so that the adventure of the street does not come in conflict with the adventure of the mind

↳ -- We must teach him that his street is not the world;

↳ -- We must teach him that he cannot retreat from responsibility to himself, that he must weigh honestly his strength and deficiencies, his skills and lack of skills.

↳ We have come to this meeting place because of the heroic dreams we have for the youth of America. ✓

↳ Our children are our future, We must impart to them our creed as ~~men~~^{people} under God, our creed as ~~men~~^{people} in a democracy, to prepare ~~him~~^{them} for what lies before ~~him~~^{them} in adulthood.

We take him as a child and prepare him for the future. Having no memories of the past, he has no doubts with which to criticize the spectacle of this modern world. He looks forward into it with confidence and belief. We must help him to see the world in all its realness. We must help make him ready for what lies ahead.

All this we cannot do as parents. We must look to our schools, to our teachers who are in fact the carriers of our culture.

Problems

↳ What concerns and disturbs me is the picture of gloom and doom that has been painted of certain areas. ↳ We read of the fatal hopelessness of the slums . . . of the unchangeable destiny of thousands and thousands of youngsters of color . . . of disadvantaged youths who live across the track. ↳ There are all kinds of studies and reports which tell us, in so many words, that our problems are too complex to be solved . . . that there will always be poverty and misery . . . and delinquency and crime . . . and wasted lives.

↳ Well, I, for one, don't believe all of this. I believe a nation mighty enough to put a man on the moon, also has enough resources to put a man on his feet.

↳ As a young man, I saw this nation at its blackest hour. I saw my neighbors and people in South Dakota losing their farms, their businesses, their helath, their hope.

↳ The important thing is hope . . . and united effort. We must not lose faith in ourselves or our government or our young people. ↳ We need the active support of every parent . . . every church . . . every social service organization . . . and every leadership group in the community. We must learn to trust people who are interested and willing to help us.

The 1963 Vocational Education Act, together with the other educational legislations of the past 10 years -- including Manpower Development and Training Act, the Area Redevelopment Act, the Economic Opportunity Act, the National Defense Education Act, and others represent the mobilization of great resources to improve the possibility of moving education forward in our time and in our technological society.

Every study of the relation between earnings and education shows that the more highly educated the man, the greater his earnings. Men who start high school but do not graduate receive an average income of about $800 more per year than men who left after the 8th grade. High school graduates, however, receive about $900 more of annual income per year than high school dropouts.

The facts are these: 73 percent of our highschool students leave school without significant occupational training gained through a formal school program. 30 percent of our school dropouts occur in the 7th, 8th and 9th grades before they have even reached the point where education can serve as a bridge between their aspirations and reality.

We cannot expect our schools -- remarkable and continuing though their effort has been -- to take up society's task in its totality.

We must address ourselves to the problems of youth with all the resources at our command -- teachers, guidance counselors, social workers, law enforcement officials, clergymen, psychologists, physicians, parents and legislators. Local community, State and Federal government must make an assault upon the total problem.

↳ The President's Message to the Congress on America's Children and Youth calls for the strengthening of existing programs and building on experience already gained. ↳ Such programs as the Peace Corps, the Job Corps, VISTA, HEADSTART, the Neighborhood Youth Corps, the Manpower Development and Program have offered up a vein of ore which must be mined to help us with critical areas in education and in family relations.

↳ The President's message seeks the investment of private agencies, institutions and universities in a joint effort with Federal government to develop and administer programs. He asks for the initiating of pilot studies to further research and experimentation on problems concerning our youth.

↳ He asks for legislation to help us "carry forward our attack on mental retardation," on juvenile delinquency, to diagnose the diseases that affect and handicap children. He asks for day care centers for working mothers. ↳ He asks us to "pledge our continuing stewardship of our greatest wealth -- our young people."

Here, in this place, where we are bound together with a common interest -- a common investment -- let us forge another link in that living chain and see that our children are given all the benefits and opportunities that this nation has to offer so that they can grow to their fullest height and breadth and in turn be able to give back to this country the best that is within them.
