Money isn't everything in a campaign, as Nelson Rockefeller's ad agency will be the first to tell you.

~~Let me announce, however, that I mean to do as Gene does,~~
~~not as he says, on the unit rule when it comes to contributions.~~

Right now they look pretty good in the polls. But you can count on them to spoil it by nominating somebody. !

I personally wouldn't buy a used candidate from that party.
 But between us, I think that's what we're going to get. I don't think they have time to break in another loser. !

Just to be sure that I remain non-partisan regarding the internal affairs of the Republicans, however, I have just sent off the following cable to Miami:

"Dear Dick, Ronny, Rocky, Chuck, Mark, John -- and Harold:
I can hardly wait." Signed HHH.

I want to tell you that I'm worried about President Johnson's decision not to go to Chicago. Now that he finds he's still front-runner in the polls, he may be considering a fifth party.

I want you to know this, though: I've told him that if he wants to express himself freely and put some distance between himself and me, I won't be offended at all. I told him, "Lyndon, you've got to be your own man." He gave me a weary smile and said Lady Bird would never stand for it.

As for my own candidacy, the only remaining problem, as I see it, is to choose the right running mate.

When all is said and done, you need someone who has been with you over the long haul -- someone you can trust on the big issues despite occasional differences.

And although you know the problems involved in having Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates from the same state, I am sufficiently confident of the strength we Democrats will carry into the Electoral College ... sufficiently loyal to old ties ... and sufficiently concerned about in-house unity -- that I may ask Muriel to serve.

I think we could count on an immediate endorsement from the 4-H Clubs.

Muriel'd be good, and she's frugal. She's already suggested that we can use Herbert Hoover's old linens in the White House.

Well, with your support, you'll have us both, etc.
