No Longer A 'White Man's World,' Dr. Bunche Shows

Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, undersecretary of the United Nations and winner of the Nobel peace prize, spoke recently before the Negro Periclean club in Birmingham on one of the most timely matters of our day.

"The world of 1959 is not by any means a 'white world' or a 'white man's world,'" he said. "Today it is overwhelmingly a non-white world. . . . New voices, the voices of yellow, brown and black men, command attention in the councils of the world. World population statistics speak with striking eloquence about race and color."

There are about 2,800,000,000 people in the world, of which two-thirds are non-white (1,900,000,000) and only one-third (900 million) white. This imbalance of color in the populations of the world has long been cited by statesmen who face facts as a reason for recognizing the potential might and rights of the colored races.

Since World War II Author Pearl Buck, who lived in China, and other American and British writers and students of world affairs in India, the Orient and elsewhere have warned that when the non-white races awoke they would demand their delayed rights and benefits with speed and fury. But largely, until recently, these warnings have gone unheeded.

Dr. Bunche, in his position as an expert on world affairs, paid tribute to the efforts of most Americans to meet what he called "our country's No. 1 problem" — racial equality. He added that in general the American Negro "is well off, better off, indeed, than most non-whites and very many white peoples" as he enjoys "the material benefits of life in the most highly developed society in the world."
