OLD UNION DEPOT is Saint Paul's best-remembered symbol of the fine rail transportation service the community enjoyed for more than half a century. With the decline of the railroad industry, the grand old building stood vacant for more than ten years until it was restored by a developer.

UNION DEPOT PLACE, restored to its former glory through physical improvement and aesthetic treatment of the building, now houses three fine restaurants and an art gallery. Continental Cable Television, a major tenant, has its headquarters on the second floor. Restoration will continue as new tenants are signed.
