The committee appointed at the former joint session reported that they had attended to the duty assigned to them, having employed Mr Geo W. Cooley, a civil engineer of Minneapolis, to make the necessary surveys and to make estimates of the costs of the Bridge contemplated, and that Mr Cooley was here and would present the report. Mr Cooley then read the following report:

To the committee on Anoka Bridge Construction Anoka Minn.

Gentlemen: - I beg leave to present here with a preliminary plan and report for an iron highway bridge over the Mississippi River below the mouth of Rum River.

In my report of February 20, 1882, I took occasion to say that a bridge located as contemplated by this report would cost from ten to twenty thousand dollars more than one placed on the upper line above the mouth of Rum River.

The present estimate is $12,215⁰⁰ above the former one, and as the river is narrower and the general belief exists that a shorter bridge would be required, the question naturally arises, why should not a bridge be built for less money below than above Rum River. The answer to this question requires an explanation of the physical peculiarities of the two lines and the relative condition may be briefly stated as follows:

on the upper line there is a mid-channel depth at a mean low water stage which we will assume to be the stage of Oct 24, 1883. of $6\frac{1}{2}$ ft on the lower line 11 feet a length of water way at same stage, on upper line 720, on lower line 550 feet. water way on upper line at extreme high water 1030 feet, which we will have reduced by the construction of the bridge to 838 feet, on the lower line 850 feet, which will be reduced by the bridge to 602 feet. On the lower line a volume of water, probably fifteen per cent greater than on the upper line. These figures show that after the construction of a bridge on the upper line there will be a greater water away at extreme high water then on the lower line, with an open channel and the same volume of water. It will then require no argument to show you that a bridge built below Rum River will require higher and heavier piers and abutments, longer and more piles and greater care in construction than if placed above, with more margin for contingencies.

Adding to this fact that a scour of about three feet has taken place on the lower line since my first report, owing to the unprotected nature of the bottom, due to washing away by a more rapid current of the coarse gravel found further up stream, we have sufficient reasons why the upper is the more preferable line. Both as regards safety and economy. The figures given in my former estimate are substantially correct for the present time. There are however some changes that I would recommend.

and second disposes with the draw rest. The two estimates may then be considered as figured on the same basis, and will provide for a first class bridge in every respect. I have calculated in this estimate for a bridge of 18 ft roadway to sustain a load of 70 pounds per square foot, with one sidewalk of six feet in width with an extra allowance of 40 lbs per square foot thereon, which is considerably above the load allowed in estimate
