America's TEN OUTSTANDING YOUNG MEN.....of 1963

For the 26th time, the U. S. Junior Chamber of Commerce will select America's Ten Outstanding Young Men of the year and honor them at an awards congress, January 24-25, 1964, in Santa Monica, California. Each winner is awarded the silver Jaycee hands—a trophy presented for 1946 to John Fitzgerald Kennedy, for 1947 to Richard Nixon and for 1956 to Dr. Tom Dooley—by the U.S. Jaycee president at the congress. The awards ceremony dramatizes a winner's career in narrative form and provides a stage for the honoree to challenge and inspire young men. His contemporaries question the winner at the forum of the 10 men and his proud predecessors will welcome him into this unique fraternity at the TOYM reunion. Ceremony, forum and reunion are the major parts of the two-day, once-in-a-lifetime congress for a TOYM award winner.

Young men of all fields of endeavor may be nominated for 1963's TOYM awards. One or more nominations may be submitted by an individual, organization, association, institution or Junior Chamber. Winners will be selected by a group of distinguished citizens.

The basis for selection of a TOYM award winner is the nominee's exceptional achievement or contribution of considerable importance in his chosen field or fields, organization, community, state or nation.

The rules governing nominations are:

1. Age limit, 21-35 years. Not eligible if nominee becomes 36 before January 1, 1964.

St. Paul Dispatch - October 29, 1962 " Attorney General Mondale should be kept on the top level team. He has conducted his office with great ability and enterprise. In our governmental system it is also important that new and highly promising political personages be continually found in the interests of the future progress and welfare of the state. Walter F. Mondale is one such personage

The Washington Post - August 26, 1962 - "The Attorney General of Minnesota, Walter F. Mondale, has the attitude of a law-enforcement officer who gauges victory not by the number of convictions he 'obtains' but by the advancement of justice.  This is the course not alone of prudence but of elementary justice as well."

New Ulm Daily Journal - March 19, 1962 "But Mondale is a dedicated young man. He has acquitted himself with credit that is all but unprecedented in the attorney general's office. He has gone after malefactors, big and little, without regard to politics."

Fairmont Daily Sentinel - March 2, 1962 "But there is every reason why Mondale should not lend his name to the candidacy for the governorship now. He's been doing too good service to the people of Minnesota, right where he is, as attorney general. His service to date has been tops, rendered without fear or favor; without the slightest trace of partisan prejudice. Besides, personally and politically, he's as clean as a hound's tooth. Minnesota needs him in the attorney general's office where he can continue doing the good job he's been doing. ... Mondale, in his official duties, has been as fair as he has been fearless and competent. The people have confidence in this young man."

f. MINNEAPOLIS TRIBUNE -6/29/60 An editorial entitled "Mondale's Good Job" said in part: "It was imperative that the Mondale report be made with all its careful detail so that the public could have access to full information about the foundation and its finances. i. HERMAN REVIEW -2/16/61 "Walter F. Mondale, Minnesota's youthful Attorney General, seems to have found a correct formula for silencing all those who spoke out in opposition to his appointment. His formula seems to be to 'just tend to business' and it certainly seems to be paying off in public acceptance. This newspaper was among the many who wondered if someone more mature and experienced should not have given the post... Like the other critics, we now find it difficult to find fault with his conduct in the office. He has carefully avoided making political use of his powers."

- c. He has won plaudits of men in both parties for his fairness and the honorable way he has conducted his political career. Tho he is serving people in state government he expresses his views on National and International problems.

Washington Post Right To Counsel

EVER SINCE 1938 the constitutional right of an indigent defendant to legal counsel at his trial has been recognized by our federal courts. But a divided opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court in 1942 held that this absolute right does not extend to state courts. As a result, 15 states do not provide court appointed attorneys to represent defendants who cannot afford their own lawyers. Ohio proudly is not one of them.

Now the U.S. Supreme Court has agreed to review a Florida case which will give it an opportunity to reconsider its 1942 opinion. Several recent opinions have indicated that the present court has some doubts about the propriety of its earlier position, and a reversal is expected. It would be a welcome one.

Denying legal counsel to an unfortunate without means, whether he is patently guilty or not, is incompatible with our concept of equal justice under the law. It puts indigents at a disadvantage with the affluent, and increases the likelihood of an innocent person being convicted merely because of his poverty. The attorney general of Florida, however, does not hold with this. He thinks anyone who cannot afford a lawyer should be left to defend himself in court, and has brazenly asked other state attorneys general to join with him in arguing that point before the Supreme Court.

Walter F. Mondale, attorney general of Minnesota, is one of those who has bluntly refused. Replying to the Florida official, he bravely wrote: "As chief law enforcement officer of one of the 35 states which provide for the appointment of counsel for indigents in all felony cases, I am convinced that it is cheap—very cheap—at the price. I can assure you that such a requirement does not disrupt or otherwise adversely affect our work. Since I firmly believe that any person charged with a felony should be accorded a right to be represented by counsel regardless of his financial condition, I would welcome the court's imposition of a requirement of appointment of counsel in all state felony prosecutions."

We trust the attorney general of Florida will receive more letters in that vein.

AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER

Fair Trials for Indigents

When a state prosecutes an indigent person for a crime, does it have an obligation to furnish him a lawyer to help in his defense? The Supreme Court is likely to give a definitive answer to the question in the pending case of Gideon v. Cochran, in which it has agreed to review a decision by the courts of Florida.

Since 1938, it has been recognized that an indigent defendant has an absolute right under the Sixth Amendment to have counsel assigned to him—in the Federal courts. But a 1942 decision by a divided Supreme Court in the case of Betts v. Brady held that the Fourteenth Amendment does not require a state to assign counsel to an indigent defendant in a noncapital felony case unless substantial unfairness resulted from the absence of counsel. Several subsequent Supreme Court opinions have indicated doubts about the wisdom of Betts v. Brady. The pending case will afford an opportunity for reconsideration.

In preparation for the case, the Attorney General of Florida has sent out letters "inviting the attorneys general of all states to submit amicus briefs" in support of his position that people too poor to hire lawyers can fairly be left to defend themselves alone against serious felony charges. A notable response to this appeal has come from the Attorney General of Minnesota, Walter F. Mondale. He wrote:

As chief law-enforcement officer of one of the 35 states which provide for the appointment of counsel for indigents in all felony cases, I am convinced that it is cheap—very cheap—at the price. I can assure you that such a requirement does not disrupt or otherwise adversely affect our work . . . Since I firmly believe that any person charged with a felony should be accorded a right to be represented by counsel regardless of his financial condition, I would welcome the court's imposition of a requirement of appointment of counsel in all state felony prosecutions.

This is the attitude of a law-enforcement officer who gauges victory not by the number of convictions he obtains but by the advancement of justice. Failure to furnish counsel to an indigent defendant amounts to denial of the concept of equal justice under law; it means that his chances of winning an acquittal are not as good as those of a wealthier defendant. The most innocent of men may be incapable of defending himself effectively in a trial court without a lawyer to weigh the validity of the indictment, to cross-examine accusing witnesses, to present an orderly defense and to see to it that the jury is properly charged. And if this assistance is vital in a trial court, it is even more so in an appellate proceeding.

Commenting on the trend of recent Supreme Court cases in a Minnesota Law Review symposium on the right to counsel, Bennett Boskey, a Washington attorney, observed: "The present posture of the law puts the state courts on notice: if they wish any assurance that their judgments will be sustained against attack, then the prudent course—for those states which have not already done so—would be to adopt a practice coinciding with the Federal rule, and to appoint counsel for every indigent defendant in the absence of intelligent waiver." This is the course not alone of prudence but of elementary justice as well.

It Took Courage

It took courage for Minnesota Attorney General Walter F. Mondale to declare himself out of the upcoming gubernatorial race in Minnesota.

His announcement came within hours after a poll had indicated that he was top choice of the Minnesota DFL as its candidate this fall. It indicates in no uncertain manner what he gave up when he declined to be a candidate. His declaration took more courage, required more sacrifice than most men in politics have to give.

But, Mondale is a dedicated young man. He has acquitted himself with credit that is all but unprecedented in the attorney general's office. He has gone after malefactors, big and little, without regard to politics. That took courage. Mondale knows, too, that there is plenty of work ahead in the attorney general's office and, unless we "read" him wrong, we suspect he proposes to do it to the very best of his ability.

Though young, Mondale has shown judgment and ability that could be envied by older men. Though young, he probably knows that four more years of devotion to duty will serve as added "seasoning" to prepare him for further public service, should he consent to offer that service.

It is not strange, therefore, that the people of Minnesota — without regard to political affiliation and belief — have confidence in the young man. Though he was figuratively taken to the "mountain top" and offered what could easily be interpreted as the right and privilege of having the governorship, he chooses to stay on a job that needs to be done. That choice is fully within the realm and typical of the young "Fritz" Mondale people of this community knew as a boy.—CNS

Works at His Job
Letter 3.14.62

One of the truly conscientious, hard-working officials who in our opinion has arisen above petty politics and is doing a truly fine job for the state is one who is well known in this part of the state where he spent his youth. We refer to Attorney General Walter Mondale. Walter does not apparently put politics first but service to the state first. Of course he is astute enough not to put his candle under a bushel, but, at any rate, it's a candle that's really burning. He's putting in full time at his job and has accomplished many things with distinct advantage to the people of the state, without regard to politics. He works at his job twenty-four hours a day.

It's a Siren Song

Minnesota DFL'ers, frantically beating the brush to find someone within their ranks to knock off Gov. Elmer Andersen at the next election have focused on Attorney General Walter F. Mondale as a likely candidate.

There is little doubt that Mondale could, if he would, give Andersen a hot race. And most of the politically astute would be willing to offer odds that Mondale would win.

But, there is every reason, why Mondale should not lend his name to candidacy for the governorship now. He's doing too good service to people of Minnesota, right where he is, as attorney general. His service to date has been tops, rendered without fear or favor; without the slightest trace of partisan prejudice. Besides, personally and politically, he's as clean as a hound's tooth. Minnesota needs him in the attorney general's office where he can continue doing the good job he's been doing.

Should he withstand the siren song of the DFL'ers, and assuming he continues to discharge his duties as he has heretofore, Mondale could have any office within the gift of Minnesotans — from governor on, up to United States senator. If neither look good to him then, it's a safe bet that the Minnesota Supreme court bench would have a place reserved for him. Or there could be a federal judgeship.

Minnesota politics is noted for the virility, the unpredictability of independent voters. It is the independent voters in Minnesota who elect or defeat the various candidates. Mondale, in his official duties, has been as fair as he has been fearless and competent. The people have confidence in the young man. Let him "season" in the attorney general's office for another term, and his strength as well as his political stature should grow.
