MAX M. KAMPELMAN

Wisdom and maturity of judgment spring quickly to mind when his associates think of Max Kampelman. An enormously effective lawyer, he is called upon for those qualities as a senior partner in the Washington, D.C., firm of Fried, Frank, Harris, Shriver & Kampelman. Through his dynamic leadership, the once small office has grown since 1955 into one with 70 lawyers that is now a major presence in the city.

A person of great principle and of a deep philosophical bent, he has utilized those aspects of his nature in his dedication to academe. Indeed, before launching his legal career, he taught at the University of Minnesota, where he earned his Ph.D. in political science. A scholar and intellectual with a flair for politics, he then became a legislative assistant to Senator Hubert Humphrey, working side by side with him in the formative days of the Americans for Democratic Action.

A seasoned expert in international affairs, particularly the area of human rights, he has been passionately devoted to that cause for the last decade. Most recently he held the challenging position of Ambassador and chairperson of the United States delegation to the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe held in Madrid, a role that won him the Anti-Defamation League's Hubert H. Humphrey First Amendment Freedom Prize. In making the award, then Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. praised Max Kampelman's "energy, genius, strength of character and nobility." And President Carter, who appointed him to the position, thanked him for his many years of service to the United States, reflecting an "unselfish devotion to the betterment of our nation and all its inhabitants."

For these and many other reasons, the members of the Vanderbilt Associates, on behalf of the entire New York University Law School, extend to you, Max M. Kampelman, our highest award, the Arthur T. Vanderbilt Medal.

Dear Walter:

I don't know how one writes a letter of appreciation to one's partners, because the relationship is one of constant appreciation. Nevertheless, something special is required for that most pleasant surprise that greeted me last Saturday night in Chicago. We had a weekend staff conference of the American Friends of the Hebrew University in Chicago. I had called the meeting in my capacity as national president, and had suggested that the lay leadership from around the country join us for the conference. What I did not know was that the Chicago chapter then planned to have a Saturday night dinner in my honor, which was, in itself, a surprise but was nowhere near as thrilling and touching as the announcement at that dinner that my partners had voted to make a contribution in my name to the Law School of the University, and that as a result, one of the facilities at the Law School will have my name attached to it. It means a great deal to me, Walter, and I am deeply grateful to you and to the Firm.

Sincerely,

Max M. Kampelman

REMARKS BY MAX M. KAMPELMAN
UPON RECEIVING 1983 VANDERBILT GOLD MEDAL
NEW YORK UNIVERSITY LAW CENTER
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
NOVEMBER 4, 1982

Mr. Chairman, Justice Rubin, members of the judiciary, members of the faculty, Mr. Blakesley, former Vanderbilt Medal recipients, and ladies and gentlemen of this most distinguished audience.

Norman, that was an extraordinarily gracious introduction and a most generous citation. I thoroughly appreciated every single one of your exaggerations. Had my parents been with us this evening, my father would have enjoyed your comments immensely; and my mother would have believed them.

Our Dean introduced me to you tonight as an ambassador -- and that brings to mind additional family recollections. I could imagine talking to my Aunt Rose, may she rest in peace, and informing her that the President had appointed me as an ambassador. There would have been a distinct silence and a tinge of decided skepticism in the air. After a moment or two, the news would sink in and I can hear her say: "Listen, Max, by me you are an ambassador; by you, you are an ambassador; by mama, you are an ambassador -- but tell me, by an ambassador are you an ambassador?"

That question, my friends, still remains to be answered. You can understand, therefore, why hard pragmatism requires me to remind you that you have before you not a professional diplomat but Max M. Kampelman, lawyer, a Fried, Frank partner with offices in Washington, London, and at One New York Plaza in New York. Let me note to my partners, my worthy, learned, distinguished, brilliant and generous partners, so many of whom are in this audience tonight, "You must share in the recognition of this evening. You and I know, after all, that you have been supporting me for more than two years.!"

My temptation this evening, in this room filled with people of learning, distinction and prominence, is to react with deep humility at the recognition you have afforded me. In all candor, however, we must recognize that lawyers are not by nature humble people. Indeed, it takes a kind of arrogance for a lawyer, let alone a Jewish lawyer, to proclaim humility.

The tale is told of a Rabbi praying during the High Holy Days. Overwhelmed by humility, he beat his breast and proclaimed: "O Lord, I stand humbly before Thee. I am nothing. I am nothing."

The cantor, affected by the Rabbi's intense piety, then stood up and chanted: "O Lord, I am humble. I am nothing. I am nothing."

The lowly sexton, the caretaker, caught up in their fervor, joined in the chorus: "O Lord, I too am nothing. I am nothing." Whereupon the cantor nudged the Rabbi and angrily whispered: "Look who thinks he's a nothing!"

Nevertheless, there is an undeniable feeling of deep satisfaction and warmth as I return tonight to this Law School, whose classes I attended at night while attempting to support myself during the day. Study and teaching have always had a great personal appeal. The richness of our American heritage, the strength of our democratic values, the promises of our evolving civilization -- all these have a close and direct kinship with our legal system and with the depth of learning symbolized by our Law School and by the noble New York University of which it is a part.

We are all proud of that identification, even as I note, with your permission, the healthy skepticism of another one of my aunts, may her soul rest in peace. She was left a small run-down bookstore in the Bronx by her second husband when he passed away, may his soul rest in peace. Business was awful, and yet when a man once went into the store to buy a book as a gift for a child, I could hear her say: "Buy him better an umbrella." The purchaser was taken aback and asked for an explanation. "That he'll sometimes open" was the response.

The word, the book, the law, the task of evolving civilization toward a higher dimension of man -- these represent our commitment as lawyers and as citizens fortunate to live in a democratic society. These, too, symbolize our government's efforts as a part of a Western alliance in Madrid.

It has been by privilege to serve as our ambassador to the Madrid European Security Conference for more than 26 months, under two Presidents and four Secretaries of State. The Helsinki Final Act, which governs our deliberations, was designed to introduce into the European East-West framework a rational standard of conduct necessary for peace and cooperation, military conduct as well as conduct in the human dimension.

The Helsinki process came into being at a time when the spirit of "detente" was strong. Follow-up meetings, the second of which was Madrid, were provided for in order to move that process forward. But, it was not to be. We opened our meeting in September 1980, with the full awareness that the spirit of "detente" was badly damaged. The meeting that was to last for five or six months is now entering its third year. It reconvenes next Tuesday, permeated with the reality that the promises made by the Soviet Union in 1975 are being ignored in a patterned and deliberate manner. Nevertheless, we continue to meet, to talk, to negotiate to condemn, to argue, to assert our values, to condemn again.

We meet -- and 100,000 Soviet troops are still in Afghanistan in an invasion which violates the fundamental principles of the Helsinki Final Act.

We meet -- and during our very meeting military threats against the government of Poland led to the imposition of martial law in that country in violation of the Helsinki accords.

We meet -- and during our meeting the Soviet Union intensifies its restrictions against the emigration of its citizens so that today only a trickle are permitted to leave and join their families -- another gross violation of the Helsinki Final Act.

We meet -- and while we are in session the Soviet Union cruelly and relentlessly persecutes and imprisons and enslaves and commits to mental institutions those of its men and women with free souls and free minds who seek to exercise them. Their crime is that they proclaim their rights as human beings, rights under civilized principles of justice, and rights under the Helsinki Final Act.

We meet and we do not walk out because Madrid gives us the opportunity to speak out -- and we do.

It would be wrong and shortsighted of us to ignore the realities, the threats to peace and understanding, the disdain for commitments made. Our task is to face those realities, challenge them and find a means of reducing their impact in the world's body politic in a manner which serves our own values in the pursuit of peace. That task is the one we pursue in Madrid.

In Madrid we try to speak for the principle of law among nations, for the principle that agreements must be lived up to. We also try to speak for the conscience of mankind. We mention the names of dissidents and prisoners of conscience because we want these courageous heroes of the 20th century to know that they are not forgotten.

We remember in Madrid that in the first list of twenty-one demands made more than two years ago by the Polish Solidarity Union, there was a demand that the Helsinki Final Act be printed conspicuously in the Polish press. And it was. We know how important the Helsinki Act is to those who do not enjoy freedom.

And we are in Madrid because European security is important to our national interest.

Europe must regain a sense of its own presence and confidence in its future. Free Europe has a larger population, a larger gross national product, a larger per capita income and greater resources than the Soviet Union. It must mobilize that strength. To the extent that we can help in that self-realization, we help ourselves.

"Detente" remains and must remain an objective of our foreign policy, because there is no viable alternative to the pursuit of peace, but it requires a mutuality that does not today exist.

And in Madrid we speak with a united Western voice. We speak for our common values.

This struggle to assert the values of law and the values of human freedom is one that takes place not only in Madrid but all over the world. It takes place in Washington and New York, too. It takes place wherever men and women keep asserting the principles that are deep in the very core of our being. It takes place wherever lawyers engage genuinely in the pursuit of justice. It takes place wherever men and women seek learning. It takes place whenever we give awards to one another to recognize and further encourage efforts to achieve the goals of liberty and justice that characterize our society, our profession and the aspirations of men and women all over the world.

That is why it has been a particular privilege for me to be able to serve our country in Madrid; and that is why I am so deeply appreciative, more than I can convey in words, of the award I receive from you tonight. I recognize it for what it is; not a recognition for services performed, but a reminder of services it remains my duty and your duty yet to perform.

Thank you.

It is better to be a live jackal than a dead lion—for jackals, not men; and those who are prepared to live like men and, if necessary, die like men, have the best prospect of surviving as free men and escaping the fate of both jackals and lions.
