MAX M. KAMPELMAN

LOS ANGELES WORLD AFFAIRS COUNCIL "ENTERING NEW WORLDS: NOT AN EASY TASK"

BEVERLY HILTON HOTEL Los Angeles, California

December 9, 1992

Two years ago, I had the privilege of being part of the American Delegation to the Paris Summit of 35 heads of government, convened under the Helsinki Final Act. The mood of the day was one of euphoria and self-congratulation. The Berlin Wall had been shattered; Communist regimes were falling; the Warsaw Pact was disappearing; the Communist Party of the Soviet Union was in shambles; democracy seemed to be spreading like wildfire

All of the countries of Europe had unanimously agreed a few months earlier in Copenhagen, at a meeting where I headed the American Delegation, that political democracy and the rule of law, not as slogans but with clear detailed specificity, were indispensable prerequisites to assure European security and cooperation. One legal scholar declared the Copenhagen document to be the modern day international law equivalent of the Magna Carta of 1215. There was no doubt. We were entering a "new world order."

That was two years ago. This past June, I again had the privilege of being a member of The American Delegation to the next heads of government Summit in Helsinki. But now, only 19 months following the euphoria, the mood was decidedly different. What I sensed was that Europe felt depressingly impotent, obsessed with challenges it could not face.

It was not just that Saddam Hussein remained in power even after Europe joined America into what appeared to be a great military victory. It was growing savagery in too many areas of the world. It was the inability to stop the violence, brutality and instability created by a ruthless Serbian leader who continues to defy and challenge civilized standards of responsible behavior. The irony of Sarajevo, again appearing at the center of war, brought back awful reminders of 1914.

And there is more. Anti-semitism is reappearing, even where there are few or no Jews; ethnic strife divides

Czechoslovakia, which in a few weeks will separate into two states; tension between Hungary and Rumania hangs in the air; vestiges of Nazism are coming forward in Germany; and, perhaps most ominous, we see a nationalism and xenophobia developing among a growing number of impatient, dissatisfied and disaffected forces in Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. Stability is threatened. The human race is once again demonstrating its capacity for cruelty in the pursuit of power. And, hundreds of thousands of refugees are displaced from their homes; with the words "concentration camp" reappearing in our consciousness and consciences.

Today, there are international institutions designed to preserve the peace -- the United Nations, The Council of Europe, the European Community, NATO, the Western European Union, the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE). Yet, their effectiveness is now seriously in question.

I have been invited to share with you this evening, in view of my "on the scene" participation in these broad and vital developments, my own perspective on what we are experiencing and what the developments mean for the dimensions of "the new world order."

During my early childhood, one lifetime, there were no vitamin tablets; no anti-biotics; no television; no dial telephones; no refrigerators; no transcontinental telephone communications; no FM radio; no synthetic fibers; no dishwashers; no electric blankets; no airmail; no transatlantic airlines; no instant coffee; no Xerox; no air-conditioning; no frozen foods; no contact lenses; no birth control pill; no ballpoint pens; no transistors. We could go on endlessly.

Many of us here tonight have seen each of them introduced.

Their cumulative effect has altered our lives. Yet, today, we take these material realities for granted, as ours by birthright and as an indispensable part of living.

During my lifetime, medical knowledge available to physicians has increased conservatively more than ten-fold. More than 80% of all scientists who ever lived, it is said, are alive today. The average life span keeps steadily increasing. Advanced computers, new materials, new bio-technological processes are altering every phase of our lives, deaths, even reproduction. No generation since the beginning of the human race has experienced and absorbed so much change so rapidly -- and it is only the beginning. As an indication of that, more than 100,000 scientific journals annually publish the flood of new knowledge that pours out of the world's laboratories.

We are living in a period of information power, with the telefax, electronic mail, the super computer, high definition television, the laser printer, the cellular telephone, the optical disk, imaging, video-conferences, the satellite dish.

Combining these instruments produces near miracles.

These developments are stretching our minds and our grasp of reality to the outermost dimensions of our capacity to understand them. Moreover, as we look ahead, we must agree that we have only the minutest glimpse of what our universe really is. We barely understand the human brain and its energy; the endless horizons of space and the mysteries found in the great depths of our seas are still virtually unknown to us. Our science is indeed a drop, our ignorance remains an ocean.

Peter Drucker, whose colleague I was privileged to be when we both served on the Bennington College faculty many years ago in Vermont, writes that we are entering a new post-capitalist world which he has named the "information society". Prophecy has never been one of my gifts, but with knowledge, science, technology, and education surpassing land, capital, resources, and manpower as the major determinant influences in shaping society, I believe the achievement of democracy, human dignity and liberty for larger numbers of people is realistically feasible.

We are brought up to believe that necessity is the mother of invention. I suggest the corollary is also true: invention is the mother of necessity. Technology and communication are necessitating basic changes in our lives. Information has become more accessible in all parts of our globe. The world is very much smaller. There is no escaping the fact that the sound of a whisper or a whimper in one part of the world can immediately be heard in all parts of the world -- and consequences follow.

But the world body politic has not kept pace with those scientific and technological achievements. Just as the individual human body makes a natural effort to keep the growth of its components balanced, and we consider the body disfigured if one arm or leg grows significantly larger than the other, so is the world body politic disfigured if its scientific and knowledge component opens up broad new vistas for development while its political and social component remains in the Dark Ages, with human beings still killing one another. I suggest to you that what we have been observing and experiencing in the dramatic political changes that have been absorbing our attention is a necessary effort by the body politic to catch up with the worlds of science and technology.

What we have also been unexpectedly observing is a fierce resistance to that change as large numbers of peoples have had their emotions inflamed by nationality and fundamentalist appeals. It is as if a part of us is saying: "Not so fast. Stop the world. We want to get off. We are not ready. We are not prepared for this new world we are being dragged into. We will resist the changes. We will hold on tight and with a determined frenzy to the familiar, the tribal, the traditional!" This phenomenon cannot in the short run be ignored as religion, nationalism, race, and ethnicity make themselves increasingly felt.

But we must not permit this resistance to overwhelm us. We must not neglect the stronger and more urgent sounds of impatient hope and expectation. The promises and realities of modern technology for better living cannot be hidden and their availability cannot long be denied. The communication age has opened up the world for all to see. The less fortunate are now aware that they can live in societies, including their own, which respect their dignity as human beings. From radio and television they know such societies are only hours away. They want that dignity and better living for themselves and their children -- and they don't wish to wait.

A larger part of the world's population is living in relative freedom than ever before in the history of the world. The latest published authoritative Freedom House annual survey shows that 1991 was the freest year since that fifty year old organization, which I have the honor to Chair, began its monitoring effort. We monitor all 186 nations and 66 related territories. With a world population of nearly 5.4 billion people, 3.7 billion people, or nearly 70%, were living in free or partly free countries and territories, the most ever. I suspect the next report will show some stagnation and decline for 1992, but the main thrust remains clear.

Governments and societies everywhere are discovering that keeping up with scientific and technological opportunities requires openness to information, new ideas, and the freedom which enables ingenuity to germinate and flourish. A closed tightly-controlled society cannot compete in a world experiencing an information explosion that knows no national boundaries. Peoples now trapped in the quagmire of ancient ethnic and national grievances and enmities will soon come to recognize that they are thereby dooming themselves, their children and grandchildren to become orphans of history, lost in the caves of the past. There is room for ethnic, national, religious, racial and tribal pride, but if that drive for self-identification is to produce respect and self-realization for the individual and the group, that drive must be peaceful and in harmony with the aspirations of others in our evolving inter-related world community.

As national boundaries are buffeted by change, the nations of the world become ever more interdependent. We are clearly in a time when no society can isolate itself or its people from new ideas and new information anymore than one can escape the winds whose currents affect us all. National boundaries can keep out vaccines, but those boundaries cannot keep out germs, or thoughts, or broadcasts.

This suggests, among many other implications, the need to reappraise our traditional definitions of sovereignty. The government of Bangladesh, for example, cannot prevent tragic floods without active cooperation from Nepal and India. Canada cannot protect itself from acid rain without collaborating with the United States. The Mediterranean is polluted by at least 18 different countries. The requirements of our evolving technology are increasingly turning national boundaries into patterns of lace through which flow ideas, money, people, crime, terrorism, nuclear missiles -- all of which know no national boundaries.

One essential geo-political consequence of this new reality is that there can be no true security for any one country in isolation. We must learn to accept in each of our countries a mutual responsibility for the peoples in other countries. For us to ignore the killings in the Balkans and the utter tragedy of Somalia, for example, is to undermine not only our values and responsibilities, but our security and self-interest as well.

Our task, furthermore, is to help influence the constructive energies of the emerging democratic societies so that they are channeled into the full peaceful realization of their aspirations. It is in our interest to fulfill that task with determination. They urgently need our help, a jump-start, just as we provided for Europe at the end of World War II. That help worked for them and for us. Its appropriate equivalent can work again in this period of obvious opportunity to shape our future. If we fail to fulfill our historic responsibility, we will be condemned by our children and grandchildren who will pay the price for our failure to assure the peace and human dignity that is at hand.

We have begun to help. We are not doing enough and we must do more. Our economic response to date, in the words of our Librarian of Congress, Dr. James Billington, has "been hesitant in tone, trivial in content, and very nearly humiliating in its effect." This must change.

The argument is made that we cannot be the policeman of the world. I respectfully suggest that no community— and our nation is an integral part of an economic, technological, scientific and political world community — can survive, let alone flourish, without a police force. We have an obligation to be part of such a force, with diplomacy our first responsibility and force available as a last resort.

The struggle for human dignity is a continuing one.

Aristotle taught us that all forms of government are transitional and vulnerable to the corrosion of time, new problems, and missed opportunities. Will we in the U.S. be wise enough to know how to assist the historic developments now underway? Will we have the insight, discipline, unity and will to fulfill our responsibilities?

Our task is to achieve the firm sense of purpose, readiness, steadiness, and strength that is indispensable for effective and timely foreign policy decision-making. Our political community must resist the temptation of partisan politics and institutional rivalry as we develop the consensus adequate to meet the challenge. Our country is today the oldest continuing democracy in the world. Our political values and our character traits have helped us build the most dynamic and open society in recorded history, a source of inspiration to most of the world. It should be a source of inspiration for us as well. We cannot take it for granted. We must realize what the American dream means to the world and the burden that puts on us.

It is not arrogant for us to proclaim the virtues of our own system because it casts no credit on us. We are not the ones who created American democracy. We are merely its beneficiaries with an opportunity to strengthen it for succeeding generations and for those in other parts of the world who do not enjoy that blessing. The changes stimulated by modern technology can assist us in forging a future based on the rule of law, liberty, human dignity, and democracy -- if we permit our values, our strength, and our sense of responsibility to provide the guidelines for that journey.

Thank you.

Pending your approval, the following is an outline of the schedule we will follow during your visit:

6:00 p.m. -- Council sponsored press conference (Optional)

6:30 p.m. -- Council sponsored student briefing (Optional)

7:00 p.m. -- V.I.P. Reception

The Honorable Max M. Kampelman September 30, 1992 Page Two

Ambassador Kampelman, the Council staff will make every effort to assure that your visit to our podium will be a pleasant and rewarding one. If there is anything at all that I may do to help you -- during planning or during your visit, please do not hesitate to let me know.

"As a student, I truly appreciate the opportunity to absorb first hand the knowledge we need to become productive citizens of a new world order. Where else can an immigrant from Chile, such as I, see and ask questions of men such as Ronald Reagan, George Mitchell, Brian Mulroney and Yitzhak Shamir?" Covina High School student

LOS ANGELES WORLD AFFAIRS COUNCIL Student Program in International Affairs

The Student Program in International Affairs provides an extraordinary opportunity for area youth to learn first hand from major international figures. All schools are invited to participate in the Student Program. Most students come from economically disadvantaged backgrounds. Private funding enables qualifying students to attend Council meetings free of charge. When possible, a special student briefing is arranged as part of the Council meeting. This unique and exciting opportunity allows students to meet privately with the guest speaker and ask their own questions. Briefings usually last 15-20 minutes and are off the record.

The Student Program is a tremendously positive experience for all involved. The students arrive motivated and prepared. Their confidence is reinforced when a figure of international prominance takes time to meet with them. As a result of the Student Program, many students develop a new self awareness and a global perspective. In today's ever smaller world, this "hands on" experience in international affairs is vital in bringing lessons from the classroom to life.

"First imagine someone who you would see on television for eight years sitting right there in (front of) your face. It gave me a feeling of importance as if I had something to do with his presidency."

Crenshaw High School student on meeting President Reagan

"The Student Program has been of inestimable value to our students. They have become much more aware of conditions and problems in international affairs. By attending these meetings, they feel like actual participants in world affairs..." Robert Ihsen, Social Studies Dept.

CALENDAR OF EVENTS:

Notification of our upcoming programs is sent bi-monthly to the local media's calendar sections. Print media receiving this calendar of events include: Los Angeles Times, Los Angeles Business Journal, Hollywood News Calendar, Downtown News, Daily News, and Pasadena Star News. Council events regularly appear in the calendar sections of these papers.

PRESS RELEASE:

All major newspapers, radio and t.v. stations receive our press releases which are mailed one week prior to the event. In addition to this, press releases are sent to those whose area of expertise specifically deals with that of the Council speaker. Follow-up calls are made just prior to the event.

Also, one week before an event, a press release is sent out over PR Newswire to metropolitan Los Angeles. This wire service reaches all major radio, t.v. wire and print media in the area, some national media and a varity of trade publications. City News Service, the most widely used wire service in the area for announcements of upcoming events, also releases news of Council events generally the day before and the day of the event.

MEETING DAY PRESS ACTIVITIES:

A one-half hour World Affairs Council-sponsored press conference is part of the Council schedule, taking place at the same location as the event, usually right before the private receptions. At this meeting with the press, speakers generally make a short statement before answering press questions.

During the speaker's address at the full meeting, press in attendance sit in the back of the room. If no press conference occurs, some questions are taken from the press during our Q & A session.

OTHER POSSIBLE PRESS ACTIVITIES:

The World Affairs Council enjoys an excellent relationship with the Los Angeles Times. Off-the-record meetings with the editorial board of the Times can often be arranged. These early-morning breakfast meetings take place at the offices of the Times.

The Council often schedules other press events for the speaker such as special interviews on the Michael Jackson Show (nationally syndicated) or on local radio, t.v. news and talk shows. C-SPAN also regularly covers our programs.

Dear Mr. Mack:

Thank you very much for your most gracious letter of August 21. You were very kind to write again and I'm pleased to accept your invitation. I am well aware of your forum, your distinguished audience, and your effectiveness in a very important part of our country. Many of my friends have spoken at your meetings and have spoken well of your hospitality and that of your associates.

My schedule for September is rather full and I will be overseas the first ten days or so of December. There is flexibility in my schedule with respect to other periods during this autumn of 1992.

Your letter does not refer to the question of an honorarium and reimbursement of expenses. I would appreciate hearing from you as to your policy with respect to that practice.

I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Max M. Kampelman

Ambassador Max M. Kampelman Partner, Fried, Frank, Harris, Shriver & Jacobson 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W. Suite 800 Washington, D.C. 20004-2505

Dear Ambassador Kampelman:

It has been several years since we last expressed our interest in welcoming you here at the Los Angeles World Affairs Council. Now, on behalf of the Council's Officers and Directors, it is my pleasure to remind you of your standing invitation to address a luncheon or dinner meeting of the Council. We are now scheduling for the fall of 1992 and beyond and would be most honored if you could join us.

With an ever expanding membership of over 9,000, the Los Angeles World Affairs Council is now going into its 40th year. The Council has long had a reputation as one of the finest and largest forums in the country for the discussion of the vital issues facing the world today.

Through our programs, we are able to offer our speakers the opportunity to share ideas with the business, political and cultural leaders of America's second largest city - a city that is fast becoming the financial, commercial, legal, and communications center of the United States.

You may know that more than 100 heads of state have spoken before the Los Angeles World Affairs Council. In recent months, the Council has hosted an illustrious group of speakers, including Former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Czechoslovak President Václav Havel, Irish President Mary Robinson, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, Polish President Lech Walesa, Nicaraguan President Violeta Chamorro, Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis, Bulgarian Prime Minister Philip Dimitrov, Chilean President Patricio Aylwin and U.S. Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff General Colin L. Powell.

AMBASSADOR MAX M. KAMPELMAN /page two

Just last week we hosted a major foreign policy address by Governor Bill Clinton before a capacity crowd of over two thousand.

Other speakers in the recent past have included President Roh Tae Woo of the Republic of Korea, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney of Canada, Vice President Dan Quayle, Secretary of State James Baker, Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, Czechoslovak Foreign Minister Jîrî Dienstbier, Secretary of Foreign Affairs Raul Manglapus of the Republic of the Philippines, Bernard Shaw of CNN, Malcolm S. Forbes, Jr., the Reverend Jesse Jackson and journalist and author Hedrick Smith to name a few.

We hope you will join them in sharing your views at the Los Angeles World Affairs Council.

Additionally, your delivered remarks will also be published in the forthcoming issue of our highly acclaimed compendium, the World Affairs Journal.

Ambassador Kampelman, we are all acutely aware of the time constraints on you, but hope you know that it would be a true honor for the Council should you accept our invitation. Our entire staff would do everything possible to make sure that your visit to Los Angeles and to our podium would be both pleasant and productive. I look forward with great anticipation to hearing from you.

Ambassador Max M. Kampelman Partner, Fried, Frank, Harris, Shriver & Jacobson 1001 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W. Suite 800 Washington, D.C. 20004-2505

Dear Ambassador Kampelman:

Many thanks for your prompt reply of 25 August to Council President Curtis Mack regarding our interest in welcoming you to speak before the Los Angeles World Affairs Council.

We are delighted and honored that you accept our invitation!

Please allow me to address your question about travel expenses and honorarium.

It has been the long standing policy and practice of the Council not to pay travel expenses nor speaking honoraria to its guests. This policy does not intend in any way to reflect a lack of enthusiasm or interest in bringing any particular individual or any particular viewpoint before our me mbership.

Instead, it is part of the ongoing tradition of maintaining the Council as a completely impartial forum, one which avoids even the appearance of ary personal or ideological endorsements.

As you might imagine, this scenario usually suggests that our guest speakers are visiting Los Angeles for other business - personal or professional - which includes time to address a meeting of the Council.

While our guest speaker is in Los Angeles, however, we are happy to provide hotel accommodations for up to two nights and ground transportation where necessary.

Using these guidelines, we would be delighted if your schedule might bring you to Los Angeles and erable you to speak at our podium.

AMBASSADOR MAX M. KAMPELMAN /page two

As to our schedule, we are happy as a matter of regular practice to leave the choice of dates to our visiting guest of honor. We set our schedule based entirely on the scheduling constraints of our speakers.

We have a number of programs already set for the Fall, and likely many more still to come. As of this moment, the month of November is slightly more open than October, though we have a good deal of flexibility all around. We would also be happy to consider dates early next year should that prove better for you.

Perhaps you might suggest a few dates that would suit you? We will be as flexible as possible in working with you to identify a mutually convenient date.

Mr. Ambassador, please let me know if you would like any additional specific information.

We look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Dear Ms. Zacuto:

Thank you very much for your letter of September 3 and the explanations in it.

My present schedule calls for me to be in California on Thursday, December 10, for a 9 a.m. board meeting in the Los Angeles suburbs. This means that I could be available for either a lunch or a dinner on the previous day, December 9. In the alternative, I could possibly arrange to be available for a luncheon meeting on December 10 or a dinner meeting that evening. I would prefer to be with you on December 9 but, if necessary, I could be available on December 10.

I look forward to hearing from you as to the feasibility of these dates.

All my best.

Sincerely,

Max M. Kampelman

Dinner, 7:30 pm Wednesday, December 9, 1992 The Beverly Hilton 9876 Wilshire Boulevard

AMBASSADOR MAX M. KAMPELMAN

Diplomat, Lawyer and Educator

"Entering a New World: not an easy task"

Max Kampelman -- the consummate diplomat. During his remarkable career he has glided with ease from one critical matter to the next, addressing the pressing questions of our time. Max Kampelman diligently guided negotiations with the Soviets to reduce nuclear and space arms through most of the last decade. More recently, he headed up the U.S. team at international talks on human rights, ethnic strife, minority populations and nationalism in Europe.

Max Kampelman's liberal, humanistic roots steered him on some unpredictable paths. Raised in the Bronx by Jewish immigrant parents, he chose to be a conscientious objector during World War II. Later, this veteran Democratic party insider was elevated to the rank of ambassador by President Reagan. An early aide to and protege of Senator Hubert Humphrey, Ambassador Kampelman has been called on throughout his career to give wise counsel to successive American presidents and foreign leaders.

Rarely do we have the opportunity for a broad exchange on international affairs with such a thoughtful, distinguished guest. Please don't miss this special occasion!
