Sleepy Eye Lake. Approved Feb. 8, 1881.

St. Paul Daily Globe, Sept. 16, 1879, p.2,c.4: Leonora, nee Sleepy Eye.....

St; Paul Daily Globe, Feb. 9, 1881, p.3,c.4: The name of the village of Sleepy Eye was changed to Loreno some time since. The newspapers there refused to recognize the change and the villagers discarded it; and the other day Representative Zieske introduced a bill in the House now in session to change the name from Loreno to Sleepy Eye Lake, and it passed that body. There is no accounting for taste. Why not style it Rip Van Winkle and be done with it.

Leg. Manual Map, 1887: Loreno.

Sleepy Eye Herald-Dispatch, Sept. 3, 1942, p.3,c.2: In 1879 the name Sleepy Eye was changed to Loreno. After a dispute between the railway company and the Post Office department it was changed back to Sleepy Eye in 1881.

The image shows a faint, tilted grid or ledger page, likely a page from a notebook or account book. The grid consists of multiple columns and rows, with some cells containing faint numbers or characters. The page is oriented diagonally, and the text is very light and difficult to read. The overall appearance is that of a scanned document with low contrast and some noise.

Description & Name Origin Established by legislative act February 20, 1855, and organized February 11, 1856, this county was named in honor of Joseph Renshaw Brown, one of the most prominent pioneers of this state. He was born in Harford county, Maryland, January 5, 1805; and died in New York City, November 9, 1870.

In his boyhood he ran away from an apprenticeship for the printing business at Lancaster, Pa; enlisted in the army as a drummer boy; and at the age of fourteen years came to the area of Minnesota, with the troops who built Fort St. Anthony, (in 1825 renamed Fort Snelling). In May, 1822, with William Joseph Snelling, son of the commandant, he explored the creek and lake since named Minnehaha and Minnetonka. John Fletcher Williams, secretary of the Minnesota Historical Society, wrote in 1871, as follows, of Brown's varied life work and his personal qualities.

"On leaving the army, somewhere about 1825, he resided at Mendota, Saint Croix, and other points in the State, and engaged in the Indian trade, lumbering and other occupations. His energy, industry and ability soon made him a prominent character on the frontier, and no man in the Northwest was better known. He acquired a very perfect acquaintance with the Dakota tongue, and attained an influence among that nation (being allied to them by marriage), which continued unabated to his death. He held, at different times during his life, a number of civil offices, which he filled with credit and ability....He was also a leading member of the famous 'Stillwater Convention' of citizens held in August 1848, to take steps to secure a Territorial Organization for what is now Minnesota. He was the Secretary of the Territorial Councils of 1849 and 1851, and Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives in 1853, a member of the Council in 1854 and '55 and House in 1857, and Territorial Printer in 1853 and '54. He was also a member from Sibley county in the Constitutional Convention ('Democratic Wing') of 1857, and took a very prominent part in the formation of our present State Constitution....He shaped much of the legislation of our early territorial days, and chiefly dictated the policy of his party, of whose conventions he was always a prominent member....But it is as a journalist and published I desire principally to speak of him here. His first regular entrance into the printing business in Minnesota was in the year 1852, though he had before written considerable for the press. Shortly after the death of James M. Goodhue, which occurred in August of that year, Major Brown purchased the 'Minnesota Pioneer' and edited and published it under his own name for nearly two years. In the spring of 1854, he transferred the establishment to Col. E. S. Goodrich. During the period of his connection with the paper, he established a reputation as one of the most sagacious, successful and able political editors in the Territory, and as a sharp, interesting and sensible writer. In 1857 he established at Henderson, which town had been founded and laid out by him a short time before, a journal called the 'Henderson Democrat', which soon became a prominent political organ, and was continued with much ability and success until 1860 or '61.

Joseph A. Wheelock wrote in the St. Paul Press, November 12, 1870: "A drummer boy, soldier, Indian trader, lumberman, pioneer, speculator, founder of cities, legislator, politician, editor, inventor, his career--though it hardly commenced till half his life had been wasted in the obscure solitudes of this far northwestern wilderness--has been a very remarkable and characteristic one, not so much for what he has achieved, as for the extraordinary versatility and capacity he has displayed in every new situation."

The village of Brown's Valley in Traverse county, founded by Joseph R. Brown, and others, was the place of his trading post and home during his last four years; and an adjoining township of Big Stone county also bears his name.

Description & Name- Origin: "Correspondence from P. ~~Hjelm~~-Hansen . . . Linden settlement begins about 12 miles west of Mankato and extends through the western corner of Blue Earth for a distance of about 4 miles, and 18 miles into Brown and Watonwan counties. With the exception of 20 Danes and 4 Swedes, this entire region is settled by Norwegians. The settlement includes 8 townships; to wit: Lincoln and Bottom Nut Butternut Valley in Blue Earth county; Linden, Lake Hanska, and White Pidgeon in Brown county; and Madelia and two unorganized townships in Watonwan."
