Description & Name Origin derives its name from Red lake, these both being translations of their Ajibway names.

Why these Indians originally so designated was uncertain until it was ascertained by the late Rev. Joseph A. Gilfillan. It had been affirmed, with poetic license, by Beltrami, who traveled here in 1823, publishing in 1824 and 1828, that the aboriginal names of the lake and its outflowing river, the latter being translated by him Bloody river, were

The lake and Red river appear with these names, in French, on the map by Verendrye (1737) and on Buache's map (1754)..... From information obtained during his travels in Minnesota in 1766 and 1767, Carver mapped the lake and the Red Lake river, giving them exactly their present name.

It tells us something of the appreciation of natural beauty and grandeur by the Indians, that they took from the hues of sunset the name of the largest lake in Minnesota, whence we now have, by derivation, the names of two large rivers, of a country, and its county seat.

Description & Name Origin This county, like others lying within the area of the Glacial Lake Agassiz, has a smoothed surface of its drift sheet, with no hollows holding lakes. Formerly it had a single lake, which gave the name of Lake Pleasant township; but that was rather a marsh, becoming occasionally a shallow lake, which has been drained, its bed being now good farming land.

Description & Name Origin This county received its name from the Red Lake river, which flows thru it, giving also its name to Red Lake Falls, the county seat. The river derives its name, in turn, from Red lake, these both being translations of their Ojibway names.

Why these Indians originally so designated the lake was uncertain until it was ascertained by the late Rev. J. A. Gilfillan. It had been affirmed, with poetic license, by Beltrami, who traveled here in 1823, publishing in 1824 and 1828, that the aboriginal names of Red Lake and its outflowing river, the latter translated by him Bloody river, refer to the blood of the slain, in the wars between the Ojibways and Dakotas. Gilfillan, who was a missionary to the Ojibways of northwestern Minnesota, from 1873 to 1898, wrote in 1885 that the Ojibway name of this lake, written by him, Misquagumiwi sagaiGUN, Red-water lake", perhaps alluded to "reddish fine gravel or sand along the shore in places, which in storms gets wrought into the water near the edges," or to the reddish color of streams flowing into the lake from bogs on its north side, probably reddened by bog iron ore. He later wrote, however, in a letter of February, 1899, that these are erroneous conjectures of some of the Ojibways, and that he had obtained more reliable information, so that he could then confidently state the origin of this name as follows: "Red lake is so called from the color of the lake /reflecting the redness of sunset/ on a calm summer evening, when unruffled by wind and in a glassy state, at which times it is of a distinctly wine color....It is not called Red lake from any battle fought on its shores."

Red lake and Red river appear with these names, in French, on the map by Verendrye (1737) and on Buache's map (1754); and the lake is so named on the somewhat later maps of Jefferys and Carver. From information obtained during his travels in Minnesota in 1766 and 1767, Carver mapped Red lake and the Red Lake river, giving them exactly their present names. Their earliest delineation, however, from personal examination, was by Thompson (in 1813-14), who in April 1798, reached Red lake, coming by way of the Red Lake and Clearwater rivers, and thence going onward to Turtle and Cass lakes.

It tells us something of the appreciation of natural beauty and grandeur by the Indians, that they took from the hues of sunset the name of the largest lake in Minnesota, whence we now have, by derivation, the names of two large rivers, of a county, and its county seat.

Of 8.8 acres. It is situated between County Highway #45 and Red Lake River, a few rods west of the village of Hunt. It includes the site of the old Pembina Fair Ground and more important, the site of an historic peace Conference between white men and the red man. There a treaty was signed which ceded to the U.S. the north half of the Red River Valley. A beautiful bronze statue of an Indian, set to stone by his hand with a peace pipe, commemorates this event. This area has received very limited developments. 5-14-1941 - Walter C. Smith
