in 1862, led in the suppression of the outbreak during the Sioux war in 1862. Was delegate in Congress, representing Minnesota territory 1849-1853; was first governor of the state 1858-1860. He was during more than 20 years a regent of the state university; was a charter member of the Minnesota Historical Society, and was its president in 1867 and from 1876 until his death at his home in St. Paul, February 18, 1891.

In 1835 Sibley built at Mendota, the first stone dwelling house in Minnesota, in which he and his family lived until his removal to St. Paul.

General Sibley was called by the Sioux or Dakota people, "Wah-ze-o-man-ee, Walker in the Pines, a name that had a potent influence among them far and near, as long as the Dakota race dwelt in the state."

In 1835 Sibley built at Mendota the first stone dwelling house of Minnesota, in which he and his family lived until after their removal to St. Paul. This house is now owned by the Daughters of the American Revolution, and is used as a historical museum.

His biography, in 596 pages, by Nathaniel West, D. D. was published in 1899; an excellent memoir of him, by J. Fletcher Williams, is in the Minn. Historical Society Collections (vol VI, pages 257-310); and a shorter biography by General James H. Baker, is in his "Lives of the Governors of Minnesota," (M.H.S. Collections, vol XIII, pages 75-105).

Among the Sioux or Dakota people, with whom Sibley had a very intimate and wide acquaintance, he was called "Wah-ze-o-man-ee," Walker in the Pines, a name that had a potent influence among them far and near, as long as the Dakota race dwelt in the state." (Williams, p. 167).

Indians who always name things from nature have called the curved moons. With the Nacotahs (Featherstonhaugh claims that the Indians of the Mississippi valley called themselves Nacotahs, and it was only other tribes who referred to them as Dacotahs) the word wee is used for both sun and moon; in fact, it means luminary, for they say "oompāy too wee" "day luminary," and "heeyāy too wee," "night luminary."
