(Not Ottertail, North Red, Red, nor Red River of the North) Upham,390: Otter Tail River. Named for Otter Tail Lake, a translation from the Ojibway. So named from a long and narrow sand bar, whose outline is suggestive of an otter tail, now covered with large woods, which extends curvingly s.e. and s. between the last mile of the inflowing Otter Tail or Red River and the lake, at its e. end, in sec.10, Otter Tail Township. Gaz.Minn.Streams,582: Otter Tail River. The source of Red River, which is called Ottertail, rises in the s.w1 part of Clearwater Co. Its course is s. through many lakes, the chief of which are Elbow, Many Point, Round, Height of Land, Little Pine, Pine, Rush, and Ottertail lakes. Below Ottertail lake the river flows in a generally w. direction until it unites with Pelican River 4 miles w. of Fergus Falls. they lie in a continuous valley, one to two miles wide, which was evidently channeled by a great river formerly flowing southward. The part of the ancient watercourse between these lakes, a distance of five miles is known as Brown's Valley. As noticed in the first chapter, the former river here out-flowing from the Glacial Lake Agassiz in the Red river basin has been named the River Warren, in honor of General G. K. Warren.

Description & Name Origin While the Glacial Lake Agassiz flowed south along the valley of Lakes Traverse and Big Stone, its outlet stream, named the River Warren, eroded that remarkable valley, with gradual reduction of the lake level. Five stages of the ancient lake during its southward outflow are shown by so many distinct beaches, each lower than the preceding. In their descending order they are named, from places where they are well developed and were first recognized and mapped, being Herman and Norcross beaches, for villages in Grant county, the Tintah beach for a village in Traverse county, and the Campbell and McCauleyville beaches in ths county. Thence each of these old lake levels, recorded by the successive low beach ridges of sand and gravel, are traced far along each side of the Red river valley, in Minnesota and North Dakota and onward in Manitoba.

Description & Name Origin While the Glacial Lake Agassiz flowed south along the valley of Lakes Traverse and Big Stone, its outlet stream, named the River Warren, eroded that remarkable valley, with gradual reduction of the lake level. Five stages of the ancient lake during its southward outflow are shown by so many distinct beaches, each lower than the preceding. In their descending order they are named, from places where they are well developed and were first recognized and mapped, being the Herman and Norcross beaches, for villages in Grant county, the Tintah beach for a village in Traverse county, and the Campbell and McCauleyville beaches in this county. Thence each of these old lake levels, recorded by the successive low beach ridges of sand and gravel, are traced far along each side of the Red river valley, in Minnesota and North Dakota and onward in Manitoba.

Description & Name Origin By Winchell: "although there is a scummy deposit of iron running from them, the water tastes alkaline, and is very much like the water of the dug well at Campbell. There is a boggy area of about 2½ acres, lying a few feet above the stream (Rabbit River), from which the water of the springs runs into the creek. This area is in the level of the stretch, and lies about six feet below the general level of the prairie. The stream is about 16 feet below the prairie, and empties into Bois des Sioux river. It is a small stream and has clear water, but an imperceptible current.

Description & Name Origin . . . commemorates Colonel Alexander Wilkin, who in the civil war gave his life for the Union, being shot and instantly killed in the battle of Tupelo, Mississippi, July 14, 1864. He was born in Orange county, N.Y., December, 1820; served as a captain in the Mexican war; came to St. Paul in 1849, and entered the practice of law; was United States marshal for Minnesota, and also secretary of the territory, 1851 to 1853; went to Europe in 1855, and studied the art of war before Sebastopol in the Crimea; afterward again was engaged in law practice in St. Paul; recruited the first company of the First Minnesota regiment for the civil war; served also in the second regiment, and was colonel of the ninth regiment. Physically he was of small size and stature; but he stood very high in courage and skill for military leadership.

An earlier county, somewhat corresponding to this in area and likewise having Breckenridge as its county seat, but named Toombs county, was established March 8, 1858. It was named for Robert Toombs (b, 1810, d. 1885), of Georgia, who had been a member of Congress in 1845-53, and was U.S. Senator, 1853-61. He became a leading disunionist, was Confederate secretary of state, 1861, and later was a Confederate general. His disloyalty against the Union so displeased the people of the county that in 1862 they petitioned the legislature to change its name. "In 1863 the act changing the name from Toombs to Andy Johnson became a law. But the subsequent political attitude of Andrew Johnson (succeeding Lincoln as president of the United States) was no less displeasing to the people, and in 1868 the law was again amended and the name changed from Andy Johnson to Wilkin." Description & Name Origin "In due time the rebellion came, and in 1862 the Republican party had obtained control of affairs in Minnesota. Robert Toombs had become a rebel General, or a Senator, or something else, and Andrew Johnson was then supposed to be the faithful among the faithful, of Southern statesmen, the very impersonation of loyalty. In a spirit of enthuriastic admiration of the man and of this cause, the Legislature of that year very properly blotted the name 'Toombs' from the map and unfortunately substituted that of 'Andy Johnson'. But, as if to illustrate the mutability of human affairs, and the danger - not to say folly - of naming counties after living men, our Legislature had their attention called to the fact that to leave the name of ' Andy Johnson' inscribed boldly and legibly upon our State map would be as disgraceful as to have retained the name of 'Toombs'. So during the late session, Dr. Pettijohn, the representative of the district comprising the country referred to, introduced a bill to change the name of the county to 'Ben Butler'. This did not meet with general favor amont the members of the House. It was then proposed to substitute the name of 'Long' in honor of Colonel Stephen Long the Topographical Engineer, an early explorer of Minnesota and particularly of the northwestern part of it..

The bill passed the House in this form and was then sent to the Senate, but during its consideration in that body, on the motion of Senator Baxter, the name of 'Long' was stricken out and that of 'Wilkins' substituted, and in this form the bill was accepted by the House. It is some compensation for the past misfortunes of Wilkin county in the efforts to give it a respectable name that it should finally be christened for a gallant Minnesota hero and patriot, who gave up his life on the battle field whilst fighting to suppress a rebellion of which Toombs was one of the prominent instigators and supporters, and which Andrew Johnson is doing all in his power to prolong and render finally successful. There is a poetic justice in this proceeding which all Minnesota soldiers and loyal men who knew the chivalric Col. Alesander Wilkin, of the Ninth Minnesota Voluntedrs, will appreciate; and they will thank Col. Baxter for his timely hint to the Legislature to perpetuate the name of one of Minnesota's bravest heroes in this appropriate manner."
