

THE HIDDEN STORY OF AMERICA'S REAL GOVERNMENT

Behind the Curtain of Law

A long time ago, certain powerful groups created rules and deals that affected countries, including the United States. The Church, the British Crown, and the U.S. Postmaster were supposed to help take care of America honestly. But over many years, some leaders secretly made choices that were unfair and broke the trust they were given.

When the United States had the Civil War, the original government system went bankrupt. After that, new companies were created to manage America's business and money. These companies were not the real government, but most people didn't know the difference.

Later, big banks and organizations like the Federal Reserve and the IMF took control of these companies. They changed laws and money systems to benefit themselves. They created "fake" versions of each state and even "fake" legal names for every person in America, written in ALL CAPITALS. These names were used like secret accounts to borrow money — without telling the people.

In 1933, the government went bankrupt again. To fix it, the governors promised that the people and their property would be used to help pay the debts. The people were never told. Banks then started treating people's bank accounts like they belonged to the government corporations, not to the real people. This is why income taxes and property taxes became possible: they were charging the “fake” accounts, not the living person.

During World War II, these tricks were used to get money and even force millions of men into the military. After the war, the same groups kept using these systems to make money. They got involved in weapons, drugs, gambling, and other bad things. They also took control of natural resources and used people’s labor and lives to stay rich. Eventually, some church leaders realized how much harm was being done. Popes Benedict XVI and Francis started working to fix the corruption. But even today, new versions of the same old tricks keep showing up. For example, the IMF and other groups created new types of money and tried to use Americans’ trust accounts again to pay huge debts.

Many people don’t know that their bank accounts, retirement funds, and even taxes are tied to these “fake” corporate names created long ago. The real people, the living men and women, were never supposed to be treated this way.

The Two Americas: What Nobody Told Us

America actually has two governments:

- The real one — the Republic, run by the people.

- A business company — hired to provide certain services.

The trouble is, the company version went bankrupt many times, and foreign groups took control of it. They used the names of the states and the people to grab money and property that didn't belong to them. All of this happened because of name tricks, secret agreements, and the takeover of accounts and property. For a long time, people trusted their leaders, not knowing that major decisions were being made behind the scenes.
