

SILVER'S THREE FLAGS

Silver's Three Flags

Why Silver Matters

Silver has become a strong idea in Mexico because many people believe it is a good way to save money. What makes this special is that almost all political groups in Mexico agree on this, even though they usually disagree on many other things.

Strong Support Across Mexico

On November 30, all 31 state governors in Mexico sent a message to lawmakers saying they support using silver as money. They asked the government to approve a law that would allow this.

Many newspaper writers also signed big newspaper pages showing their support.

Former lawmakers joined in too.

A national TV poll showed that 96 out of 100 people liked the idea of using silver as money.

Who Is Against It—and Why

The Bank of Mexico, Mexico's central bank, strongly disagrees. It wants to be the only one allowed to make money, even though paper money has no real value by itself. The bank does not want people to have another choice for saving, like silver.

The bank even sent a group of people to a government meeting to try to stop the law from passing by confusing lawmakers.

Even if the law does not pass right away, many people believe the idea will not go away. Once people understand something important, it is hard to erase it.

Silver Stands for More Than Money

Silver also stands for national pride and unity.

Long ago, Italy was controlled by another country. People wanted freedom and unity. A powerful song helped bring the people together, and Italy eventually became its own nation.

In the same way, silver reminds people of who they are, their culture, and their independence. Using silver again connects people to their history.

Silver as a Safety Net

If silver is used alongside paper money, even in small amounts, people will always remember that real money exists. In hard times, silver can help protect families and communities.

Silver reminds people that honest money works and that societies can thrive using it.

A Message for the World

If Mexico uses silver again, it could become a light of hope for other countries. It would show there is a better way than money that keeps people poor and dependent.

Paper money gives great power to banks and governments, because they can make more of it anytime. This can lead to control over people's lives.

Silver stands for something different—it stands for human dignity and fairness.

The Three Flags of Silver

Silver carries three powerful messages:

1. A safe way for people to save
2. Unity and pride for a nation
3. Protection of humanity from unfair control

The idea of using silver as money is alive, growing, and cannot be stopped.
