How America's Government Went Missing

Our Government Is Divided

Most people think the United States has always had just one government. But that is not true. In 1776, The United States of America was created by the states working together. These states were not businesses. They were free and self-governing. Together, they shared power to deal with other countries.

Later, another government was created to help do certain jobs. This helper government was never meant to take over. But over time, people were told the helper government was the real one. That caused confusion.

What Went Wrong

After the Civil War, big changes happened. The original state governments stopped working the way they were supposed to. They were replaced with temporary governments. These were meant to be short-term, but they stayed for over 150 years.

People were told that names like “the State of Florida” and “The State of Florida” meant the same thing—but they didn't. This mistake allowed others to take control when they were not supposed to.

What Happens Next: The Law Steps In

When someone is given a job and fails to do it, the law says that job goes back to the original owner. That means the power goes back to:

- The states
- The people

This happens automatically under the law. The power did not disappear. In order to fix things, people are working through these steps:

- Claim your lawful name and property
- Bring your rights back to the land where you were born
- Take back control of your own legal decisions
- Restart local county assemblies
- Restore state assemblies

What Is Happening Now

People across the country have been working to fix this problem. So far:

- Lawful assemblies have been found in every state
- Americans are reclaiming their original rights
- All 50 states are now meeting and organizing

The government was never meant to be running all the time. Most of the time, people should be free to live their lives. But right now, this work must be done.

Nothing in America has been abandoned. The land and credit belong to the people.

A Peaceful Call to Action

We are standing up to fix what was broken—peacefully and lawfully.

We are asking leaders, the military, and the world to recognize the truth. We want fairness, honesty, and respect for the people who belong to this land.

This is about restoring what was promised long ago—and doing it the right way.
