THE LOCAL BUSINESS OWNER'S GUIDE TO

Holiday PROMOTIONS

That Work

The holiday season is the biggest revenue-driving opportunity of the year for local businesses. Customers are primed to shop, celebrate, and seek out the best deals—but with so many businesses vying for attention, standing out takes more than a basic discount.

To make the most of this season, you need creative, strategic promotions that not only attract customers but keep them coming back long after the holidays.

Step 1:

Create Irresistible Holiday Offers (With a Unique Twist)

Discounts are great, but they're also expected. If you want to stand out, you need to add a layer of creativity to your promotions. For example, instead of a standard 20% off, why not offer a "Buy More, Save More" deal? A local coffee shop could advertise:

This strategy not only increases average transaction values but also encourages customers to return after the holidays to redeem their bonus.

Real-Life Example:

A family-owned bakery ran a "Holiday Sweet Rewards" campaign where customers who spent $50 on cakes or pastries received a $10 voucher for their next visit. The promotion boosted holiday sales and created a steady stream of loyal customers in January.

Step 2:

Create Limited-Time, High-Value Bundles

Holiday shoppers are often stressed and short on time. Make their lives easier with curated bundles that deliver value. Combine your best-selling products or services into themed packages that customers can gift or use themselves.

Industry Example:

A day spa created a "Winter Bliss Package" that included a massage, facial, and aromatherapy candle for one flat price. This bundle cost less than booking each service individually, but it was still profitable thanks to upsells like product purchases during appointments. Bonus Tip: Label these bundles as "Limited Edition" to create urgency. When people think they might miss out, they act faster.

Step 3:

Host Festive Events That Build Community

Why not turn your business into a hub for holiday cheer? Hosting an event not only attracts foot traffic but also creates an emotional connection with your brand. The trick is to make it memorable and shareable.

Ideas for Events:

> A gardening center could host a “Holiday Wreath-Making Workshop” where customers craft their own decorations using fresh greenery.

> A local brewery might run a “Holiday Beer Tasting Night” featuring seasonal brews and live music.

Pro Tip:

Partner with other local businesses to co-host events and double your reach. For instance, a bakery and florist could team up for a “Cookies and Centerpieces” workshop.

Step 4:

Leverage Social Media for Maximum Buzz

Social media is your holiday megaphone, and the best part? You don't need a huge budget to make an impact. Use it to run festive campaigns that engage your audience and amplify your message.

Strategies That Work:

1. Interactive Giveaways: Ask followers to tag, post daily stories counting down to share their favorite holiday traditions in the Christmas, showcasing a featured product or comments for a chance to win a gift card or tip each day.

2. Behind-the-Scenes Content: Show how your business is prepping for the holidays—decorating, packing orders, or creating products. People love seeing the human side of brands.

3. Holiday Countdown Stories: On Ins-

Real-Life Example:

A local bakery created a “12 Days of Cookies” campaign on Instagram. Each day, they featured a different holiday cookie flavor, paired with a short, fun story about its inspiration. The result? A 40% increase in pre-orders for holiday cookie boxes.

Step 5:

Don't Just Sell —Solve Problems

One of the most overlooked strategies for holiday marketing is positioning your business as the problem solver. People are overwhelmed during the holidays, so show them how your product or service can make their lives easier.

Examples by Industry:

- > A salon could promote “Holiday-Ready Hair Packages” for those attending parties or events.
- > A hardware store could run a campaign around “Last-Minute Decorating Essentials” for shoppers scrambling to finish their holiday setups.
- > A cleaning service could offer “Post-Party Cleanup Packages” to save hosts from the dreaded aftermath of holiday gatherings.

When you focus on solving problems instead of just pushing sales, you build trust and loyalty.

Step 6:

Use Email Marketing Wisely

Holiday emails are everywhere, but yours can stand out by being personal, timely, and packed with value. Skip the generic “Holiday Sale!” subject lines and opt for something more intriguing, like:

- > “Your Holiday Cheat Sheet is Inside!” > “Make Gifting Easier (and More Fun!) This Year”
- > “Special Treats Just for You—Click to Unwrap!”

Email Content Tips:

- > Include gift guides tailored to your audience’s interests.
- > Share exclusive discounts or early access to sales.
- > Offer helpful tips, like “How to Choose the Perfect Gift” or “Holiday Hacks for Busy Shoppers.”

Step 7:

Track Your Results to Refine for Next Year

The holiday season is the perfect testing ground for new ideas. Pay close attention to what works and what doesn’t so you can refine your strategies for the future. Use tools like Google Analytics to track website traffic, or review your social media engagement to see which posts performed best.

Pro Tips:

Create a simple post-holiday survey for customers. Ask them what they loved about your holiday promotions and what they’d like to see next year. Their feedback is pure gold for crafting future campaigns.

Powerful Takeaway: Create More Than Sales—Create Memories

The most successful holiday promotions do more than boost revenue—they create lasting impressions. By focusing on unique offers, community-building events, and problem-solving solutions, you'll stand out in a crowded market and win over your customers' hearts. This holiday season, don't just aim to make a sale.

Aim to make a difference in your customers' lives. That's how you turn one-time holiday shoppers into loyal, year-round advocates for your business. Now, go out there and make this holiday season your best yet!

VOICE SEARCH & LOCAL SEO

The Shift You Can't Afford to Ignore

"Hey Google, where's the closest spot for amazing tacos?" "Alexa, what time does the hardware store open on 3rd Street?" Sound familiar? That's because voice search is no longer a "nice-to-have" in your marketing toolbox—it's a critical shift that's changing how local customers connect with businesses like yours.

Here's the catch: this isn't just a shiny new tech trend. Voice search is a whole new behavior that prioritizes convenience, speed, and hyper-specific answers. If your business isn't speaking the language of voice search, you're missing out on customers who are ready to buy. Let's change that.

WHAT MAKES VOICE SEARCH DIFFERENT?

Here's the key difference: people don't "search" when using voice—they ask. Think about how you use voice assistants like Siri or Alexa. Instead of typing "best Italian food Dallas," you're saying, "Where can I get great Italian food near me tonight?" See the difference? It's conversational, specific, and immediate. And here's where it gets wild: more than 70% of voice searches are local in intent. These aren't hypothetical questions—they're moments of decision-making. If your business can't provide the answer fast, you're out of the running.

THE OPPORTUNITY FOR LOCAL BUSINESSES

Here's why this matters for you: Voice assistants are picky. They don't give users a list of 10 options—they pick one. If your business is optimized for voice search, you could be that one. But this means you need to meet the search engine's criteria for relevance, authority, and speed. Let's break down what this means practically.

HOW TO OWN VOICE SEARCH RESULTS

THE CONVERSATIONAL SHIFT

Most local businesses are still optimizing their content for keywords like “plumber NYC” or “coffee shop Denver.” That’s old-school. Voice search queries sound more like:

- “Who’s the best-rated plumber near me?”
- “What coffee shops are open late in Denver?”

Your content should reflect this shift. Start building content that answers real-world questions. Think FAQs, blog posts, and GBP updates written in plain, conversational language. Stop writing for search engines and start talking like a human.

PRO TIP: Use free tools like AnswerThePublic to find out exactly what questions people are asking in your industry. Then, answer them.

YOUR “DIGITAL FRONT DOOR” (A.K.A. GOOGLE BUSINESS PROFILE)

If your GBP isn’t optimized, voice search won’t even know you exist. Here’s the litmus test: Are your business hours updated for the holidays?

- Have you added new photos recently?
- Are you posting weekly updates or promotions?
- These tiny tweaks make a massive difference.

even know you exist. Here’s the litmus test: Are your business hours updated for the holidays?

- Have you added new photos recently?
- Are you posting weekly updates or promotions?
- These tiny tweaks make a massive difference.

IT'S NOT JUST ABOUT SPEED—IT'S ABOUT FAST ANSWERS

Your website's load speed matters (big time). But even more important? How quickly you answer your visitors' questions.

Think of voice search as a race to the finish line. If someone lands on your site and has to dig for your phone number or location, you've already lost.

To fix this:

- Use headings to call out key info like "Our Hours," "Services We Offer," or "Where to Find Us."
- Add a "Near Me" section to your site with clear location details.

Voice assistants reward clarity. If your site provides a direct answer to a user's question, you're more likely to rank.

THE SECRET WEAPON: FEATURED SNIPPETS

You've seen them—the little box at the top of Google with a concise answer to your question. In voice search, this snippet is often the only answer users hear. How do you get featured?

- Write in short, easy-to-read paragraphs (40-60 words max).
- Use structured data (schema markup) to help Google identify your content as snippet-worthy.
- Answer specific questions directly and clearly.

Think of this like the digital billboard for your business—it's worth the effort.

WHY YOU NEED TO THINK MOBILE FIRST

The vast majority of voice searches happen on mobile devices. If your website doesn't load in under three seconds or isn't easy to navigate on a phone, you're invisible. Period.

Here's how to fix it:

- Compress large images to speed up load times.
- Use responsive design so your site adapts perfectly to any screen size.
- Make your call-to-action buttons big, bold, and thumb-friendly.

Remember: mobile users aren't casually browsing—they're ready to act. Make it easy for them to take that next step.

THE BIGGER PICTURE

Voice search isn't just about answering questions—it's about positioning your business as the go-to authority in your local market. By adapting to this shift, you're not just future-proofing your marketing—you're building deeper trust with your customers. It's not rocket science. It's about doing the simple things right: clear answers, optimized profiles, and websites that work for real people (not just algorithms).

FINAL TAKEAWAY: BE THE BUSINESS PEOPLE TALK ABOUT

Voice search isn't some far-off trend—it's happening right now, and it's growing fast. The businesses that adapt today will dominate tomorrow's local markets. If you want to be the name people hear when they ask, "What's the best option near me?" it's time to step up.

So, what's your move? Optimize for voice, make it easy to find you, and start owning those answers. Your customers are asking—and now you know how to answer.

HOLIDAY MARKETING ON A BUDGET:

CREATIVE IDEAS THAT DON'T BREAK THE BANK

The holidays are a critical time for small businesses, but creating an effective marketing campaign doesn't have to drain your budget. With a little creativity and strategic thinking, you can attract more customers, build goodwill, and increase sales without spending a fortune. Let's explore some cost-effective holiday marketing ideas designed to make an impact without breaking the bank.

1. Refresh Your Google Business Profile (GBP) for the Holidays

Your Google Business Profile is one of the most valuable (and free!) tools for reaching local customers during the holiday season. A few simple updates can help your business stand out when shoppers are searching for last-minute gifts or holiday services.

Actionable Tips:

Update Your Photos: Add seasonal photos of your storefront, holiday displays, or special products to give your profile a festive feel.

Promote Special Offers: Use the "Posts" feature to advertise holiday sales, gift cards, or events. For example, "Stop by this weekend for 15% off all holiday-themed items!"

Adjust Hours: Ensure your holiday hours are accurate so customers know when to visit you. Add Keywords: Incorporate holiday-related

REAL-LIFE EXAMPLE:

A local toy store added photos of their festive window display and posted about their "Santa's Workshop Sale" on GBP. The post brought in new foot traffic from parents searching for holiday gifts nearby.

2. Use Free Tools Like Canva to Create Eye-Catching Marketing Materials

Eye-catching visuals are essential for holiday marketing, but you don't need a graphic designer to create them. Canva, a free online design tool, offers a wide range of holiday-themed templates that you can customize in minutes.

What You Can Create:

Social Media Graphics: Design holiday sale announcements or countdown posts.

Posters and Flyers: Create in-store displays or materials to distribute around your community.

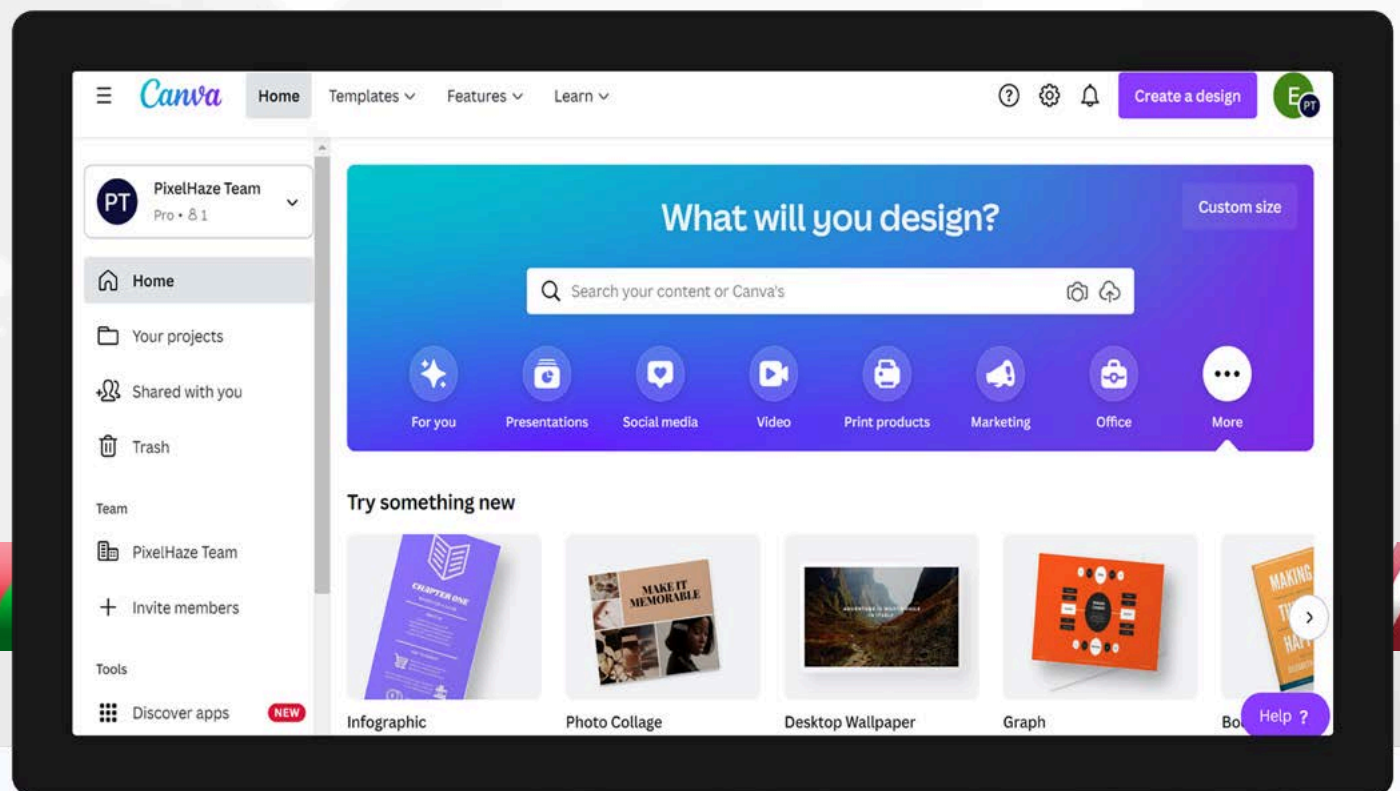

Email Headers: Add a festive touch to your holiday email campaigns.

Gift Guides: Showcase your products or services in an easy-to-read, visually appealing guide.

Pro Tip: Stick to your brand colors and fonts to maintain a consistent look across all your marketing materials.

REAL-LIFE EXAMPLE:

A local café used Canva to design a “12 Days of Lattes” Instagram post series, featuring a different holiday-inspired drink each day. The posts were simple yet engaging, and they doubled the café’s Instagram engagement during December.

3. Tap Into Organic Instagram Campaigns

Instagram is a powerhouse platform for connecting with customers during the holidays, and you don't need to spend on ads to make an impact. Organic campaigns that encourage interaction can drive significant engagement.

BUDGET-FRIENDLY INSTAGRAM IDEAS:

Run a Holiday Giveaway: Ask followers to tag a friend in the comments for a chance to win a gift card or free product.

Leverage Reels: Create short, fun videos showcasing your holiday products, behind-the-scenes prep, or staff holiday wishes.

Use Polls and Questions: Use Instagram Stories to ask followers about their favorite holiday traditions, gifts, or products. This interaction keeps your business top-of-mind.

REAL-LIFE EXAMPLE:

A local boutique ran a "Holiday Wishlist" campaign, asking followers to comment with their favorite item from the shop. One winner was chosen to receive their pick for free. The campaign boosted engagement and attracted new followers who discovered the store through tags.

4. Partner with Other Local Businesses

Collaboration is a cost-effective way to expand your reach and build community goodwill. Partner with complementary businesses to share resources and promote each other's services during the holidays.

COLLABORATION IDEAS:

Co-Branded Promotions: Offer joint discounts, like "Shop at [Your Business] and get 10% off at [Partner Business]."

Gift Bundles: Combine products or services into a holiday bundle. For example, a spa and a florist could create a "Relax and Bloom" package.

Shared Events: Host a holiday pop-up market or charity drive together to attract more foot traffic.

REAL-LIFE EXAMPLE:

A local bookshop partnered with a neighboring coffee shop to offer a "Books & Brews" holiday package. Customers who bought a book received a free coffee voucher, and both businesses saw increased sales.

5. Make the Most of Email Marketing

Email marketing is one of the most cost-effective ways to reach your audience. Even if you have a small list, a well-crafted holiday email can drive significant engagement and sales.

Ideas for Holiday Emails:

Holiday Gift Guides: Curate a list of your best-selling items or services and include direct links for easy shopping.

Special Offers: Share exclusive discounts or free shipping offers for email subscribers.

Holiday Countdown: Send a series series of emails counting down to Christmas, each featuring a different product or service.

Pro Tip: Use free tools like Mailchimp (for lists under 500 subscribers) to design and send professional-looking emails without spending a dime.

REAL-LIFE EXAMPLE:

A home décor store sent out a “Holiday Must-Haves” email featuring their top five bestsellers. Each product had a clickable link, driving traffic directly to their online shop. The email generated their highest sales day of the season

6. Create a Festive Photo Opportunity

Sometimes, all you need to attract customers is a fun and shareable experience. Setting up a festive photo spot in your store or outside your business can bring in foot traffic and encourage social sharing.

What to Include:

- A decorated backdrop with seasonal props like Santa hats, wreaths, or holiday lights.

- A branded hashtag so customers can tag your business when they post their photos.

- A small incentive, like a discount or freebie, for customers who share their photos online.

REAL-LIFE EXAMPLE:

A flower shop created a “Holiday Selfie Wall” with an arch of poinsettias and fairy lights. Customers loved taking pictures, and the shop gained dozens of tagged posts on Instagram, increasing their visibility.

7. Embrace Community Outreach

Giving back is not only good for your community but also builds positive brand awareness.

Community outreach doesn't have to be expensive—small acts of kindness can make a big impact.

Ideas to Get Involved:

Sponsor a Local Event: Donate a product or service as a prize for a school or community fundraiser.

Holiday Donations: Collect food, toys, or coats at your store and offer a small discount to customers who contribute.

Volunteer as a Team: Share photos of your staff volunteering at a local charity to inspire others and show your business's commitment to the community.

REAL-LIFE EXAMPLE:

A pet supply store partnered with a local animal shelter for a "Santa Paws" event. Customers could bring their pets for holiday photos with Santa in exchange for a donation. The event raised money for the shelter and brought in dozens of new customers.

Powerful Takeaway: Big Results Don't Require a Big Budget

Holiday marketing doesn't have to be expensive to be effective. By leveraging free tools, collaborating with other businesses, and tapping into organic social media, you can create a memorable campaign that resonates with your audience.

The key is to focus on creativity, community, and consistency. With these budget-friendly strategies, you can make the most of the holiday season while keeping your finances intact. So, roll up your sleeves, get creative, and watch your small business shine this holiday season!

How Small Businesses Can COMPETE WITH BIG BRANDS In the New Year

Big brands seem to have it all: massive budgets, teams of small businesses have the upper hand where it matters most—community connection, agility, and the ability to deliver personalized experiences.

In the new year, you don't need to outspend the competition. You need to outthink them. By playing to your strengths and adopting savvy strategies, you can not only compete with big brands but win where it counts. Let's dive into how.

Dominate Local SEO With Laser Focus

Big brands may show up on every national search, but when it comes to local queries like “best breakfast spot near me,” they don’t have the same advantage. Small businesses can outshine them by targeting hyper-local keywords and optimizing their Google Business Profile (GBP).

A local gym updated their GBP with new photos of their classes, regularly posted “Pro Tips for Winter Fitness,” and highlighted January deals like “Sign up now, get your first month free!” They ranked #1 for searches like “affordable gym near me” and saw a 30% increase in memberships during the first quarter.

Using keywords that reflect local intent, like neighborhoods or landmarks, and keeping your GBP active with fresh posts, seasonal offers, and updated hours can make a huge difference in visibility.

Deliver Personalized Customer Experiences

Big brands might know a customer’s purchase history, but they can’t greet them by name or remember their favorite coffee order. Small businesses can build customer loyalty by going above and beyond to create personalized, meaningful experiences.

A neighborhood bookstore started offering personalized book recommendations based on past purchases. They followed up with emails like, “We think you’ll love this new release,” and included a 10% discount. Sales jumped 25%, and customers raved about the thoughtful touch.

Using tools like email marketing platforms or even simple customer surveys to gather preferences lets you tailor offers and recommendations for a truly personal experience.

Own Social Media With Authentic, Local Content

Social media is one of the best tools small businesses have to level the playing field. While big brands push polished campaigns, small businesses can connect authentically with their audience through behind-the-scenes posts, local shoutouts, and real-time engagement.

A local bakery used Instagram Reels to show how they make their signature holiday cookies. The reel, titled "Behind the Apron," garnered thousands of views, drove in-store visits, and even earned a feature in a local news story.

Tagging your city in posts, highlighting local events, and interacting with other businesses in your community can create content that resonates with your audience and builds lasting connections.

Outshine Big Brands With Stellar Customer Service

Customer service is where small businesses can leave big brands in the dust. While corporate helplines and automated emails frustrate customers, small businesses can provide fast, human-centered service that builds trust and loyalty.

A family-owned auto repair shop responded to a Yelp review within hours, offering a free follow-up service for a dissatisfied customer. That response not only turned the reviewer into a loyal client but also impressed potential customers reading the interaction.

Quick responses to inquiries via email, social media, or review platforms can create a lasting impression and set your business apart.

Use Technology to Work Smarter, Not Harder

Technology is the ultimate equalizer, allowing small businesses to automate, streamline, and market like the pros—without a big budget. From email campaigns to CRM software, the right tools can save time and improve customer experiences.

A vintage clothing store used Canva to create eye-catching Instagram posts, Mailchimp for automated email campaigns, and HubSpot's free CRM to track customer interactions. The result? A 40% boost in online engagement and increased foot traffic during their winter sale.

Focusing on tools that simplify tasks like creating social posts or managing customer follow-ups ensures you're spending your time on what matters most.

Build Strong Community Ties

Unlike big brands, small businesses are deeply rooted in their communities—and that's a major advantage. Customers often prefer to shop local when they know their money supports local jobs and services.

A local café partnered with a florist for Valentine's Day, offering coffee-and-flowers bundles.

The collaboration doubled sales for both businesses and strengthened their reputation as community-focused brands.

Partnering with complementary businesses to cross-promote and share audiences can expand your reach without additional costs

Turn First-Time Shoppers Into Lifelong Customers

Big brands often focus on acquiring new customers, but small businesses thrive by building relationships that keep people coming back.

Loyalty programs, follow-ups, and exclusive perks can transform a one-time buyer into a lifelong supporter.

A yoga studio started a loyalty program where customers earned points for every class attended. Those points could be redeemed for free sessions or branded merchandise. Customer retention increased by 35%, and the program became a selling point for new members.

Follow-up emails thanking customers, sharing exclusive offers, or asking for feedback can turn holiday shoppers into loyal advocates

Final Thoughts: Think Big, Act Local

The new year brings challenges, but it also brings opportunities for small businesses to thrive. By leaning into what makes your business special—your local knowledge, personal touch, and ability to adapt—you can outshine even the biggest competitors.

Success doesn't come from mimicking big brands; it comes from doubling down on what they can't do. Focus on what makes your business unique, engage authentically with your community, and use tools that maximize efficiency. In 2025, small businesses won't just compete—they'll lead.

🎅 From the Desk of St. Nick:

It's the most wonderful time of the year!

But for business owners like you, the holidays can feel like a whirlwind. The competition is fierce, the expectations are high, and let's face it—getting noticed can feel like being just another bulb in a string of lights, barely noticed among the crowd.

Here's the thing: This isn't my first sleigh ride. I've seen how businesses that plan ahead can turn holiday chaos into their most profitable season—and set the stage for success long after the decorations come down.

🎁 What's on your business's wish list?

- Local SEO: Get discovered where it matters most—right in your community.
- Social Media Management: Build real connections that turn followers into loyal fans.
- Facebook Ads: Reach the right people at the right time, with campaigns that convert.
- PPC/Lead Generation: Fill your pipeline with high-quality prospects.
- SMS Marketing: Stay top of mind with messages that get read—and acted on.
- Responsive Web Design: Make your business look great on any device.

This isn't just about the holiday rush—it's about setting your business up for success year-round.

So, what do you say?

This season, give your business the gift of growth. Let's build something lasting, together.
