

Dr. Pam's starter picks for real nutrition

Want to upgrade your dog's bowl without ditching kibble cold turkey? These 3 real food formats mix well and deliver real nutrients - fast. Start by replacing 10% of the kibble with one of these toppers. Over 2-3 weeks, work up to 25% of the meal as real food. (remove the same amount of kibble - don't just add more food)

Air Dried: Woof

Woof makes it easy to feed raw without turning your kitchen into a science lab. Their freeze-dried meals are sourced with care, packed with whole-food ingredients, and balanced to support long-term health. Perfect for pet parents who want raw nutrition with zero guesswork.

Gently Cooked: Raised Right

This is as close as it gets to home-cooked without the prep. Every ingredient is clearly listed (no mystery meats here), and they cook at low temps to preserve nutrients. Plus, they post lab results on every batch – because they know pet parents are done trusting brands that don't earn it.

Freeze Dried: Smallbatch

Smallbatch is exactly what it sounds like – handcrafted, thoughtfully sourced, and made in small runs so quality doesn't get lost in the scale. They use pasture-raised meats, organic produce, and zero fillers. It's high-integrity food you can feel good about serving – and your dog will actually eat it.

Dr. Harvey's

Dehydrated: Dr. Harvey's

Dr. Harvey's dehydrated base mixes are made with thoughtfully sourced whole foods – you add the protein, they handle the rest. No preservatives, no synthetics, just clean nutrition that travels well and builds real vitality. Great for pet parents who want some DIY feel without flying blind on balance.

These toppers aren't for every dog or every budget. If your dog has gas, bloating, soft stools, or even vomiting – skip the richer options for now. When in doubt, pull the cooked food out!
