

Is Your Dog's Treatment Plan Strategic or Chaotic?

You've got your dog on the best whole food diet. Three different supplements. Working with a holistic vet. Maybe an acupuncturist too. You're doing EVERYTHING.

So why isn't it working?

Here's what nobody tells you: throwing every "good" therapy at the problem can create MORE chaos than doing nothing at all.

Some modalities amplify each other. Some cancel each other out. And some? They're fighting for control of your dog's body while you're caught in the middle wondering why nothing's sticking.

This guide shows you what actually works together - and what's sabotaging your efforts without you even knowing it.

SAFE TO COMBINE WITH ANYTHING:

- Chiropractic
- Whole food nutrition & supplementation
- Ozone

REQUIRES COORDINATION:

- Acupuncture (don't combine with homeopathy)
- Western herbs (coordinate with other supplements)

EXPERT COORDINATION REQUIRED:

- Homeopathy (most complex, easy to suppress)
- Chinese herbs (pattern-based, requires expertise)
- Repurposed drugs (interaction risks, monitoring needed)

The Bottom Line:

The biggest mistake? Googling and adding supplements without understanding how they interact. Cases with 20+ supplements mean the body can't respond to any of them well. Having ONE person coordinate everything is essential.
