“That’ll keep ‘em busy for a while.”

With Age Comes Wisdom Series

That'll keep 'em busy for a while.

Deep in the hills where shamrocks grow,
Lived a young Mother Leprechaun, typically going with the flow.
Her children, taking a brief pause from their devices,
Relentlessly shared their agony of screen time a long time ago.

On the verge of caving in, a feeling every parent must know,
Tempted to see how far a child she could throw,
She remembered her years growing up and shouted,
"I'll ask dad! When it comes to keeping kids busy, he's a pro!"

To keep them from mischief, he spun a grand tale,
Of a pot full of gold at the end of the rainbow trail.
"Find it, my dears, and riches you'll see,
But only the wisest can set the gold free!"

Through valleys they searched, through rivers so wide,
Climbing up mountains, so eager with pride.
They dug in the dirt, they peered under stone,
Each whisper of wind was a hint to be known.

Seasons passed, yet they never found,
A glimmer of gold across the soft, mossy ground.
Still, Mother just smiled and let them explore,
Knowing they'd learn something richer in store.

They found love in the chase, joy in the run,
Laughter in moments beneath the warm sun.
For the greatest of treasures, the truth of the gold,
Was not in a pot—but of their journey to be told.
