crow's nest

Something original in the way of housing, the Crow's Nest has been fondly labeled a "fun slum" by one of its residents. Since 1948, the doors have been open to any University Navy ROTC student desiring a place to eat and sleep and a corner in which to study. Requirements include paying bills and participating in Wednesday Night Field Day, the "clean up" period launched at 6 p.m. and lasting until the work is done.

Residents are involved in activities scheduled through the Navy ROTC including intramurals, service projects and a formal dance in December.

Coordinating the operations were James Voss, president; Leslie Schaffner, vice-president; Ronald Crawford, treasurer; Dean Nobles, work manager; Carl Beveridge, food buyer.

Army cadet Brian McGee Shivers feels that an ROTC student differs very little from the typical University student who holds a part-time job. Yet he finds that students' attitudes toward ROTC are "a misunderstanding about the program. Most students see a person on campus in a uniform and they think he's a Boy Scout."

Actual participation in the ROTC program is less time consuming than a part-time job. Since most cadets spend less than six hours a week on ROTC-related functions, including three hours of classes and an hour on drill, they have time for intramural sports, extracurricular activities and the social events that other students enjoy. Most feel that the program is worthwhile because of the benefits the military offers. ROTC scholarships are among the most extensive at the University.

Many ROTC students do not enter the program with a life-time career in mind, but with an attitude that the scholarship and leadership benefits will be advantageous in any field they choose.

With the absence of the uniform, Navy ROTC classes appeared much the same as any other class.

anchorettes

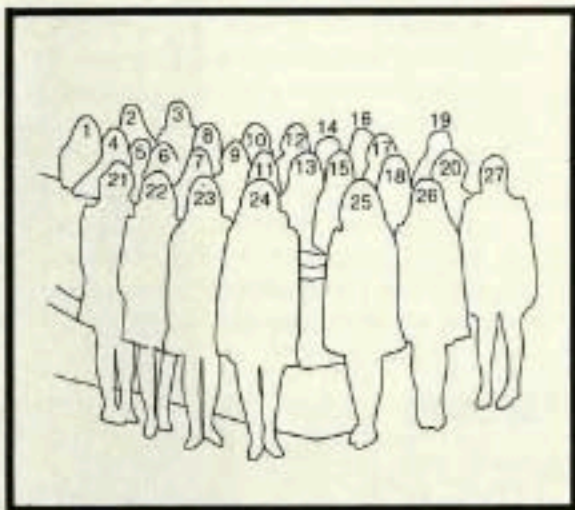

navy auxiliary

In an attempt to promote Navy ROTC, former Navy Sweethearts and interested University women combined to form Anchorettes.

A board of review of sweethearts and midshipmen selected women on the basis of attendance at a series of rush activities. Requirements are a 3.2 GPA and enrollment at the University.

Service projects included hosting an Officers' Wives' Tea, ushering at officer commissioning and selling ads for navy publications. Members also attended beer calls and the annual formal.

Fall officers were Catherine E. Tolbert, president; Rebecca Lee Grover, treasurer; and Barbara C. Parker, secretary. Anchorette advisor was Lieutenant Jack Willhoit Rowe.

navy rotc

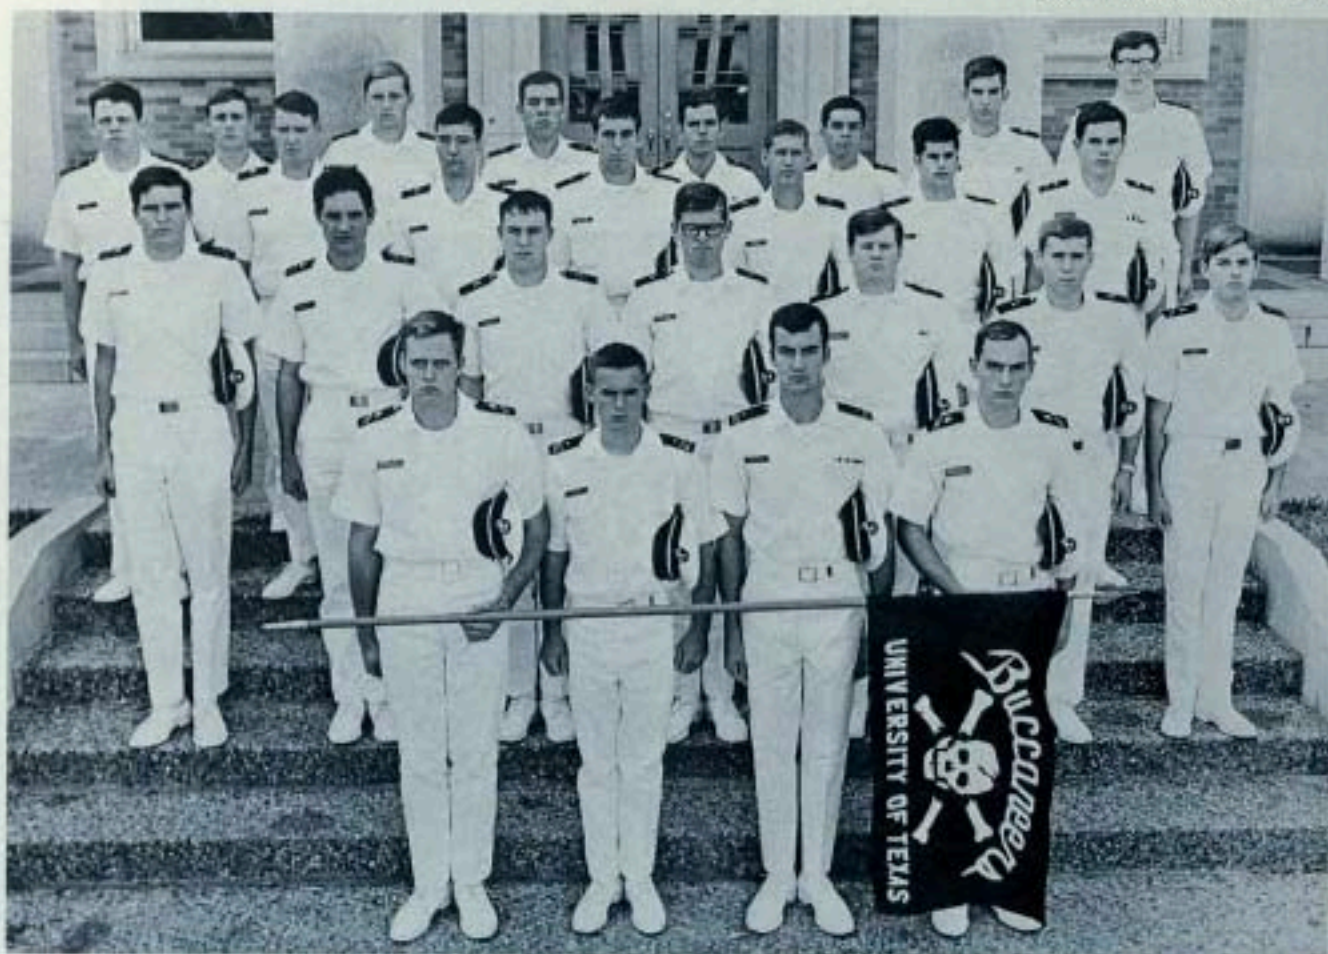

The formation of a new two-year program brought women into the ranks of the Navy ROTC for the first time. The females joined cadets in classes and weekly drills in preparation for careers as commissioned officers.

Midshipmen, who are required to take naval science courses along with their regular studies, also attend summer training sessions.

ROTC social activities included an Octoberfest get-together, several beer calls and a December Ball at Bergstrom Air Force Base. The midshipmen also participated in campus intramural sports and interscholastic drill meets.

praetorian guard

Praetorian Guard furthers the development of individuals in the ROTC through practical experience in military leadership, academic training and social activities. Upon recommendation for membership by ROTC instructors, cadets and midshipmen went through a pledge program which culminated with a formal initiation ceremony.

Social events included casino parties and gathering in Dallas for OU weekend. Members worked at the Central Texas Invitational Rifle Match and with the Run for Your Life program.

Officers included Jerry Wayne Dalton, commander; James Nolan Bostic, executive officer; Paul Arthur Suhler, finance officer; Robert R. Gannaway, service and social officer; Edgar Allen Michaelson, personnel and recruiting officer; Leroy David Thompson, executive adjutant and CTI coordinator. Lieutenant Colonel Jesse Don Lyles served as advisor.
