For Openers...

> Missouri Basketball is back in the NCAA Tournament for a school record-tying fifth consecutive year as the Tigers face former Iowa State Head Coach Larry Eustachy and the Colorado State Rams on Thursday night at approximately 8:20 p.m. CT at Rupp Arena in Lexington, Ky.

> Missouri last played in five consecutive NCAA Tournaments from 1986-90 and 1999-03 ... The Tigers have never made six consecutive trips to the NCAA Tournament in school history, but this current run of five straight trips to the Big Dance is the longest active streak in the SEC ... Florida is second with four.

> Missouri is a No. 9 seed for the fourth time in program history ... Mizzou's most recent stint as a No. 9 seed came in 2001 when the Tigers toppled now conference foe Georgia (70-68) before falling to No. 1 seed Duke (94-81) in Greensboro, N.C. ... Mizzou was also a No. 9 seed in 1981 and 2000.

> Mizzou will play in Rupp Arena for the second time this season ... Missouri dropped a 90-83 overtime decision to Kentucky on Feb. 23 before ESPN Gameday despite a career high 27 points and 10 assists from Phil Pressey.

> Missouri last played an NCAA Tournament game in the gym of a conference foe in 1980 in Lincoln, Neb., when the No. 5-seeded Tigers topped No. 12-seeded San Jose State (61-51) and No. 4-seeded Notre Dame (87-84, OT) ... Missouri is 3-0 in NCAA Tournament games played on the home court of a league rival.

> Missouri has just two players that have suited up for the Tigers in an NCAA Tournament game ... Laurence Bowers has been a part of the last five Missouri trips to the NCAA Tournament (redshirted in 2011-12), including four wins ... Three of those wins came in 2009 (Elite Eight) and a fourth win came in 2010 ... Phil Pressey is making his third trip to the NCAA Tournament with the Tigers ... Alex Oriakhi made two trips to the NCAA Tournament while at Connecticut, including a run to the 2011 National Championship ... Tony Criswell was at UAB when the Blazers lost a 2011 First Round game to Clemson in Dayton, Ohio.

> Missouri has been outstanding under Haith on a neutral court during his two seasons ... The Tigers are 4-2 in those settings this year with wins over Stanford (78-70) and VCU (68-65) and a loss to then-No. 2 Louisville (84-61) in the 2012 Battle 4 Atlantis in Nassau, Bahamas ... Missouri also beat No. 10 Illinois (82-73) in St. Louis, before splitting games with Texas A&M (62-50) and Ole Miss (64-62) last week at the SEC Tournament in Nashville, Tenn. ... Overall Missouri is 11-3 in neutral-site games under Haith.

> Mizzou is the lone high major team in college hoops with six players averaging double figures in scoring ... The Tigers have been one of college basketball's more balanced scoring teams since 2010-11 having five players in double figures in 2010-11 and 2011-12 before having six in double figures this season.

> Missouri is one of college basketball's winningest teams since 2008-09 ... The Tigers have 130 wins over the last five years, which is ninth among high major programs nationally.

> Mizzou continues to be one of the country's better rebounding clubs, ranking No. 2 nationally with 41.4 boards per game ... The Tigers are No. 3 nationally in rebounding margin (+9.6), just behind Thursday's opponent, Colorado State, who leads the nation at +12.4 ... Missouri has been great on the glass in its last 15 contests, boasting a rebounding margin of +10.7.

Mizzou Basketball Cliff Notes...

> Missouri Basketball returns to action on Thursday night as the Tigers face Colorado State at approximately 8:20 p.m. CT on TBS ... Missouri is making its first appearance on TBS in the NCAA Tournament after playing on TNT the last two seasons.

> Head Coach Frank Haith is going for his 24th win this season after recording 30 wins in 2012 ... With a victory, Haith would join Norm Stewart as the only coaches in Mizzou history to win 24 games multiple times ... Stewart had eight seasons with 24+ wins.

> Don't take this trip to the NCAA Tournament for granted ... Phil Pressey is the lone Tiger ever to play a complete season for Head Coach Frank Haith and if you break down the numbers Missouri is getting 84.8 percent of its scoring and 91.8 percent of its rebounding from players that did not see action for the club last season (30-5) ... Only tournament host Kentucky returned fewer starters this year than Mizzou.

> Speaking of Pressey, the junior has 573 career assists and is in "no man's land" with regards to career dimes and conference rank, but he would be seventh all-time in Big 12 history and just 51 assists shy of the Top 10 in SEC history ... He also recently broke his own Missouri single-season assist mark (233) and ranks No. 6 in SEC history in that category ... He is eight assists shy of No. 2 in SEC single-season history, a record shared by former Kentucky great John Wall ... Sean Tuohy of Ole Miss (260 assists, 1979-80) is the single-season record holder.

> A number of Pressey's postseason assists this year have gone to Alex Oriakhi who is 13-of-14 from the floor in two SEC Tournament games with seven dunks.

> Missouri is 11-3 under Head Coach Frank Haith on a neutral court over the last two years, including an impressive 4-1 mark vs. Top 25 opponents.

> Missouri is in the midst of its fifth consecutive 20-win campaign, a new school record ... The Tigers have actually won 23+ games each of the last four seasons.

> MU had also won 20+ games in four consecutive years from 1988-92 and 1979-83 before eclipsing that mark.

> Overall head coach Frank Haith is a very good 9-4 vs. Top 25 opponents at Mizzou and is 5-3 vs. the Top 10.

> Missouri is 5-2 vs. Top 10 opponents at home since 2008-09 and is 8-4 vs. Top 12 opponents since Mizzou Arena opened in 2004-05.

> Missouri finished second in the SEC in scoring at 76.2 points per game ... The Tigers finished the regular season averaging 80.8 points over their last nine contests, shooting a solid 49.7 percent from the floor ... That average is up to 83.4 points on 53 percent shooting over the last five games of the regular season.

> Missouri has been very good in rematch opportunities under Frank Haith ... Missouri is 6-0 when meeting a team for the second time this year, including five wins after suffering a loss in the first meeting of the season ... Mizzou recently knocked off Texas A&M after a road loss in College Station ... Mizzou was 7-2 in rematch games in 2011-12 and is 13-2 overall in such games under Haith.

> Mizzou is No. 7 nationally in offensive rebounding percentage at 39.6 percent (KenPom.com) and have used that great rebounding to rank No. 13 nationally in offensive efficiency ... Mizzou of course led the country in offensive efficiency a season ago.

> Missouri, Duke, Indiana, Creighton and Florida are the lone teams to rank among the Top 15 in offensive efficiency each of the last two years ... What makes that stat even more impressive is the fact the Tigers have just one player returning from last season's team, Phil Pressey, and are getting nearly 92 percent of their scoring production from fresh faces.

> Mizzou is also much improved in its defensive efficiency over last season ... Per Kenpom.com, the Tigers are No. 48 in defensive efficiency compared to No. 115 last year.

> Head Coach Frank Haith won his 50th game at Mizzou on Feb. 28 at South Carolina (63 total games) ... He was the fastest to 50 wins in school history.

> To put that in perspective Mike Anderson won his 50th game in his 81st try, Quin Snyder won No. 50 in his 80th game and Norm Stewart grabbed win No. 50 at Mizzou in his 92nd game ... George Edwards is actually No. 2 on the list, winning his 50th game in his 79th attempt ... Wilbur Stalcup won his 50th in game 86 tries.

> Missouri has tied a school record with six different players having scored at least 20 points in a game this season ... The last time that happened at Mizzou was during the 2008-09 season.

> Overall Missouri has 25 20-point efforts from those six players after having 33 20-point nights last year.

> Mizzou has played just 15 games this season with its regular rotation ... The Tigers are 10-5 in those contests and three of those eight wins are vs. ranked opponents (No. 10 Illinois, No. 23 Ole Miss and No. 4 Florida).

> With injuries and a near complete roster turnover, Missouri has used eight different starting lineups this year ... Haith used the same starting lineup throughout the 2011-12 campaign.

> The Tigers lead the SEC in free throw shooting, hitting 73.9 percent of their charity tosses on the year ... Overall this season the Tigers have made 508 free throws and their opponents have attempted just 565.

> Nationally the Tigers rank No. 38 in free throw percentage (.739) and are the No. 8 high major free throw shooting team in America.

> A big reason for those free throw numbers is senior forward Alex Oriakhi, who is shooting a career best 73.9 percent at the line on the year and is hit 76.9 percent of his attempts in league play.

> Over the last four seasons Missouri is shooting 74.2 percent (2121-of-2858) from the foul line as a team and the Tigers have not been below 72.4 percent as a team since 2008-09.

> Mizzou has been very good in the second half of games all season ... The Tigers are averaging 40.7 points and are shooting 49.3 percent from the floor, 37.1 percent from three-point range and 76.6 percent from the foul line in the second half this year.

> The club boasts a +5.6 scoring margin (40.7-to-35.1) in this second half of those games as well.

> Mizzou's defense was outstanding at home this season, as just three teams topped 70 points vs. the Tigers (Auburn, Ole Miss and LSU) and opponents averaged just 62.4 points on 38 percent shooting at Mizzou Arena.

> Missouri has been one of the country's top rebounding teams throughout the year and has out-rebounded 27-of-33 foes in 2012-13 ... Missouri tied its largest rebounding margin of the year on March 5 (+25) vs. Arkansas and has recorded a double-digit rebounding advantages in 18-of-33 games, including four straight vs. Ole Miss, Mississippi State, Arkansas and Florida.

> The Tigers also average 13.7 offensive rebounds per game (No. 19 nationally) and turn that into 13.8 second-chance points per contest.

> Missouri has had six different players record double-figures in rebounds in a game this season, which is the most since six Tigers accomplished the feat during the 1995-96 campaign ... The school record for the number of players recording at least 10 rebounds in one game is seven, set during the 1959-60 season.

> In addition, Missouri already has a total of 22 point-rebound double-doubles between four different players (Bowers, Oriakhi, Ross and Bell), bettering the nine team double-doubles for Mizzou in 2011-12.

> Although the Tigers have a number of familiar faces due to transfer years with the program, just one player, Phil Pressey, has played for Head Coach Frank Haith ... Missouri is getting 84.8 percent of its scoring and 91.9 percent of its rebounding from players that did not see action at Mizzou a season ago.

> Missouri continues to get strong bench production thanks to the consistent play of Tony Criswell, Earnest Ross and the addition of Jabari Brown ... Missouri is averaging 18.3 points per game from its bench on the year.

> On the season Missouri has 22 double-figure scoring efforts off the bench (Ross - 12, Bell - 4, Criswell - 3, Brown, Jankovic and Webster-Chan - 1).

> Despite having so many newcomers, Mizzou has been balanced through 33 games with eight players averaging at least 15.6 minutes a contest ... Nine different Tigers have also reached double figures in scoring in a game this season and seven different Tigers have recorded at least 7+ boards in a game.

> Missouri has won 73 consecutive regular-season, non-conference home games since 2005-06 and since 2006-07 (66-0) the club's average margin of victory has been 26.7 points in those non-league home tilts.

> Missouri is 16-0 in home non-league games under Frank Haith and 15 of those 16 wins have been by double figures ... In fact Mizzou is 24-2 in regular season non-league games under Haith and have won 18 of those games by 10 or more points, including wins over Villanova (10), Notre Dame (29) and California (39) on neutral courts.

> Haith was of course named the National Coach of the Year by the Associated Press, taking the Tigers to their second 30-win season in school history and fourth consecutive NCAA Tournament.

> Mizzou got an early start to its 2012-13 campaign, playing five games in Europe from Aug. 8-18 ... However none of Missouri's current players saw action overseas, proving to be a great opportunity for the MU newcomers to get extended playing time.

> The Tigers played games in Amsterdam, Belgium and France.

> Mizzou also had four players ranked among the top players at their position by CBS Sports ... Phil Pressey headlined that list at No. 2 among point guards.

> Missouri's transfer class of Keion Bell, Jabari Brown, Alex Oriakhi and Earnest Ross is being considered as one of the best in basketball history by the Sporting News.

Mizzou Player Quick Looks ...

#1 Phil Pressey, 5-11, 175 Pounds

> Finalist for the Bob Cousy Award in 2012 and once again in 2013.
> First Team All-SEC selection by the league's coaches.
> Has six games with 10+ dimes this season and has four point-assist double-doubles this year, tops in the SEC and a new school record.
> Boasts a 2.4-to-1 assist/turnover ratio over his last eight games with 64 dimes and just 27 miscues ... Missouri is also shooting 49.2 percent from the floor and averaging 75.5 points during that stretch.
> One of three high major juniors with 500+ career assists ... Lorenzo Brown of NC State has 580 and Aaron Craft of Ohio State recently joined that list with 509 ... Jason Brickman of Long Island (710) and Chaz Williams of Hofstra / UMass (605) have also reached 500+ dimes in three seasons.
> Pressey has been great in his last two outings vs. ranked opponents, initially scoring 22-points and dishing four assists vs. No. 23 Ole Miss, his fourth 20-point outing of the year, and then scoring seven points and dishing 10 dimes vs. No. 4 Florida.
> Also enjoyed a career high 27 points to go with 10 assists and four steals at Kentucky.
> The effort by Pressey was the first 20-point, 10-assist game at Missouri since Melvin Booker scored 23 points and dished 13 dimes vs. Illinois in a triple overtime win in 1993.
> Averaging 8.0 dimes over his last eight games.
> Already the school record holder for career assists (573) and recently broke his own single-season school record with 233 ... Had 223 dimes a season ago.
> Needs four more steals as a junior to claim the career mark at Mizzou in that category as well.
> Preseason All-American and SEC Player of the Year that ranks No. 8 nationally in assists per game (7.1), while scoring 11.6 points a contest.
> Was a member of the John R. Wooden Award Midseason Top 25 along with teammate Laurence Bowers.
> Has scored or assisted on 41 percent of Missouri's buckets this season.
> Tied the Mizzou Arena record with 13 assists (11 points) during a win over Alabama to open SEC play.
> Scored a career high 26 points on 10-of-22 shooting in the win over Bucknell ... Named SEC Player of the Week on Jan. 7.
> Nearly duplicated that effort with 25 points and four steals at LSU.
> Broke the school record with 19 assists at UCLA on Dec. 28 ... Shattered the previous mark of 13 assists in a game.
> Added 19 points to record the first 19-point, 19-assist game in basketball (college or NBA) since John Stockton (Utah Jazz) in the 1990-91 season.
> The 19 dimes were the most by a major college player since Mateen Cleaves (Michigan St.) went for 20 in 2000.
> Finished three rebounds shy of a triple-double in the win over Illinois logging 12 points, 11 assists and seven boards.
> Has six career point-assist double-doubles, a school record.
> Named to the Battle 4 Atlantis All-Tournament Team in November after averaging 14.7 points and 7.7 assists.
> Preseason First Team All-American by CBS Sports.
> Named to the Naismith National Player of the Year Watch List by the Atlanta Tip off Club.
> Ranked the No. 2 overall player in the SEC by Sports Illustrated in its preseason Top 10 list.
> Ranked the No. 5 overall player nationally by Fran Fraschilla of ESPN.
> Broke the Mizzou single-season assists record last year with 223 assists and was second with 74 steals.
> Third on the club in scoring (11.6) and leads in assists (7.1) through 33 games ... Leads the SEC overall in assists per game as well.
> Dished nine assists and scored 19 points, narrowly missing a double-double in the season opener vs. SIUE.
> Scored 11 points and dished eight assists in the win vs. VCU ... Scored the game's final five points to lead the comeback win.
> Chipped in 18 points and eight assists in the win against Stanford.
> Has 26 career games with 8+ dimes.

#3 Tony Criswell, 6-9, 240 Pounds

> Added nearly 20 pounds of muscle (up to 240) while in Mizzou's weight program.
> Returned to action on Jan. 12 at Ole Miss, scoring six points (3-4 FGs) in 14 minutes ... Also grabbed two boards.
> Was outstanding in the win over Arkansas, scoring seven points and grabbing seven boards in 22 minutes.
> Strong in the SEC Tournament win over Texas A&M, scoring 10 points and recording four boards in 18 minutes.
> Has made four starts and averaged 7.3 points and 5.5 rebounds in those four contests.
> Energy guy for the Tigers that was a difference maker in the win over VCU, grabbing seven boards in just 16 minutes ... Also helped knock a loose ball off the Rams in the final minute to secure the win.
> Took a critical charge in the win vs. Shaka Smart's VCU Rams and took two more in the win over Appalachian State.
> Was key in Missouri's win over Illinois, taking yet another charge while scoring seven points and grabbing five boards.
> Scored 10 points in 19 minutes vs. Appalachian State on 5-of-8 shooting.
> Recorded a career high 13 points in the win over Southeast Missouri State on 6-of-8 shooting, including a three-pointer.
> Has NCAA Division I experience after beginning his career at UAB ... Started eight games as a redshirt freshman for the Blazers.
> Made a great debut for Missouri vs. SIUE, grabbing 10 rebounds in just 18 minutes ... Also took two charges and scored three points.

#5 Keion Bell, 6-4, 200 Pounds

> Named one of college basketball's Top Four Impact Transfers by ESPN The Magazine and has been a First Team All-SEC type performer in league action.
> Has scored over 1,700 points in his career.
> Closed the regular season averaging 15.7 points on 58 percent shooting and 47 percent shooting from three-point range (7-of-15) in his last 11 regular-season games.
> Hit just 2-of-10 shots in the SEC Tournament, but averaged 6.0 rebounds in two games, including five offensive boards.
> Was outstanding defensively in the SEC Tournament and teamed with Jabari Brown to hold Texas A&M's Elston Turner to just seven points on 3-of-17 shooting in that postseason win.

> First Tiger since Marcus Denmon (2011-12) to score 20+ points in three consecutive games ... Denmon accomplished that feat last season vs. Northwestern State (31), Villanova (28) and Navy (22).
> Has topped 20 points in five of his last 13 games including 20-point efforts vs. Ole Miss (21), at Mississippi State (24), at Arkansas (25) and at South Carolina (24).
> Was second on the team in scoring with 14.0 points per game in league action and shot 44.4 percent from three-point range in league play.
> Paced the SEC in field goal percentage (.579) in league play and ranked third in free throw percentage (.857), eighth in scoring (14.0) and is just outside the Top 10 in steals per game (1.1).
> Second in the conference in free throw shooting (all games) at 87.1 percent.
> Was magnificent in the win at South Carolina on Feb. 28, scoring 24 points on 8-of-12 shooting, including 18 first-half tallies.
> Hit 9-of-11 shots and narrowly missed a double-double with 25 points and eight rebounds at Arkansas ... The 25 points are his high as a Missouri Tiger.
> Had a spectacular return to his hometown of Los Angeles, scoring 17 points and grabbing six boards on 8-of-13 shooting ... The 17 tallies were a career high as a Missouri Tiger.
> Returned to the starting lineup vs. South Carolina State and played solid all-around ball with four rebounds, two steals and 12 points.
> Recorded a 12-point, 11-rebound double-double vs. Southeast Missouri State in 32 minutes.
> Has scored 1,726 points in his career.
> High-flying guard that won top play honors on ESPN's Top 10 Plays of the Day after dunking over six people during Mizzou Madness on Oct. 12.
> Was a key practice player for Missouri during its 30-5 season, sitting out due to NCAA transfer guidelines.

#14 Negus Webster-Chan, 6-7, 200 Pounds

> Has started five games in the backcourt with Phil Pressey this season, including the Jan. 22 win over South Carolina.
> Solid all-around game in the win over Vanderbilt, hitting a trey, grabbing two rebounds and dishing three assists in 16 minutes.
> Played well vs. LSU, hitting a trey in seven minutes.
> Brings great size along the perimeter for Missouri and is able to play each of the three guard positions.
> Played 34 minutes in his debut vs. SIUE and scored 11 points, dished four assists and ripped away three steals.
> Made his first career start vs. VCU and scored 12 points on 4-of-8 shooting vs. the Rams ... Played a career high 36 minutes due to his ball-handling ability.
> Led the Tigers with 11 rebounds in the win over Alcorn State and was the first Tiger since Keyon Dooling in 1998-99 to begin his career with 3+ thefts in consecutive games.

#21 Laurence Bowers, 6-8, 227 Pounds

> Missed last season with a torn ACL (left knee).
> Outstanding student that is a 2012 graduate of Mizzou, working towards the completion of his Master's degree, which will occur this spring.
> Named a Fourth Team All-American by College Sports Madness on March 15.
> Named Second Team All-SEC despite missing five games at the start of the league season.
> Named an Arthur Ashe Award Finalist.
> Named to the SEC All-Community Squad.
> Missed five games this season with a sprained MCL in his right knee, but returned at LSU and scored 10 points in 32 minutes.
> Named ESPN's Comeback Player of the Year (Mid-Season) on Dec. 23 by Jay Bilas.
> Is 26th all-time at Missouri in career scoring with 1,241 points, passing former teammate Leo Lyons (2005-09).
> Averaging 17.2 points and 7.4 rebounds over his last

> Also scored 23 points and dished five dimes in the win over South Carolina ... Hit 8-of-10 FGs in the 22-point road win.
> Scored a then-career high 22 points in the win over Alabama ... Knocked down 5-of-7 treys, including five consecutive in 37 minutes ... Also added two assists.
> Poured in 21 points on 4-of-8 three-point shooting in the win against Vanderbilt.
> Scored 20 points on 7-of-11 shooting with three assists and three steals at Mississippi State.
> Led the Tigers with 16 points, including four three-pointers at Florida, chipped in 17 vs. South Carolina and dropped in 19 at LSU on four triples.
> Made his first career start as a Tiger vs. Illinois and scored a then-career high 18 points and grabbed seven boards ... Hit 3-of-7 treys and grabbed seven rebounds in the win.
> Scored 14 points on 4-of-8 three-point shooting at UCLA ... Grabbed seven boards in 39 minutes.
> Opened his career with 12 points and three assists in 20 minutes vs. South Carolina State.
> Known for his shooting ability, but his first two recordable statistics were assists.

#33 Earnest Ross, 6-5, 222 Pounds

> Has been outstanding in his 23 games coming off the bench this season, averaging 11.0 points and 5.0 rebounds, tops in the SEC.
> Was solid in the SEC Tournament, averaging 9.5 points and 7.5 rebounds in two games.
> Scored a season high 23 points against his former club (Auburn) on Feb. 2, tying a career high with 5-of-6 three-point shooting.
> Poured in 21 points to go with 10 rebounds in the first meeting against South Carolina ... Hit a critical trey with the game tied at 63 and just 1:10 left.
> Would have been third in the SEC in three-point percentage in league play (.423) with enough attempts.
> Did make a start at Ole Miss due to an injury to Laurence Bowers ... But is once again the Tigers' top reserve.
> Had a great performance in the SEC opener vs. Alabama, dropping in 19 points on 7-of-12 FGs and 3-of-4 treys ... Added five boards and two steals.
> Recorded a double-double in the win over Alcorn State with 17 points and 10 rebounds ... Hit 7-of-8 shots and dished three assists in 28 minutes.
> Logged another double-double with 10 points and 11 boards in the win against Stanford.
> Reached double figures 17 times on the season, including 16 points and three assists vs. South Carolina State off the bench.
> Came up big for the Tigers in the win over Illinois, recording eight points and grabbing six boards ... Had a huge put-back after a missed trey to give the Tigers the lead for good with 5:33 left in the game.
> Scored 13 points and led the club with nine boards against Appalachian State.
> Third on the club in rebounding (5.1) and second in three-point makes (48).

#35 Stefan Jankovic, 6-11, 230 Pounds

> Grabbed seven rebounds and hit a free throw in the win over Alcorn State ... Grabbed six offensive rebounds, tops on the club in the win.

NCAA Tournament History...

Heading into the 2013 NCAA Tournament, Mizzou has the most active NCAA Tournament wins without advancing to the Final Four with 22 ... Mizzou is 22-25 overall in 25 NCAA Tournament appearances and has advanced to the Elite Eight on four separate occasions, including twice since 2002 ... The most recent trip was the 2009 NCAA Tournament.
> Missouri's first Elite Eight trip came in the state of Kentucky (Louisville) in 1976.

Five In A Row!

Missouri earned its school record-tying fifth consecutive trip to the NCAA Tournament this season … The Tigers have qualified for every Big Dance since 2009, a streak that began when Laurence Bowers entered as a freshman.
> Mizzou last made five consecutive NCAA Tournaments in 1990 and made its fourth consecutive trips to the NCAA Tournament in 1993, 1995 and 2003, before accomplishing the feat of four consecutive once again in 2012.

How Quickly We Forget, How Little Mizzou Returned

It's fitting Missouri plays in the NCAA Tournament at the home of the Kentucky Wildcats as Mizzou and Kentucky returned the least amount starting experience (with its current team) in college basketball this year.

> Kentucky had no returning players back that made a start for the Wildcats last season and Missouri has just one, Phil Pressey.

> Two other SEC schools had just two players returning that made a start last year, Mississippi State and Vanderbilt ... Utah, Nebraska and Florida State joined MSU and Vandy with just two returning players with starting experience in 2011-12 ... To top it off, Mizzou is the lone team on that list to make the Big Dance.

Team	Starters Back	Record	Postseason
Kentucky	0	21-11	NIT
Mizzou	1	23-10	NCAA
Utah	2	15-18	N/A
Florida State	2	18-15	NIT
Vanderbilt	2	16-17	N/A
Nebraska	2	15-18	N/A
Miss. State	2	10-22	N/A

Missouri Faces Familiar Foe...

Larry Eustachy will be a familiar face for Tiger faithful as the 22-year coaching veteran spent five seasons as the head coach at Iowa State, helping the Cyclones to a 101-59 record from 1998-2003 ... Eustachy led Iowa State to back-to-back NCAA Tournaments, including the 2000 Elite Eight ... His club also won the Big 12 title in 2000 and 2001.

> Overall Missouri was 6-5 vs. Eustachy's Cyclones, including a memorable 112-109 4OT win at Hearnes Center on Jan. 13, 2001 ... In that game Clarence Gilbert led the Tigers with 43 points and Kareem Rush chipped in 32.

> On a neutral floor Missouri was 1-0 vs. Eustachy and the Cyclones, winning 79-59 on March 7, 2002, in Kansas City at the Big 12 Tournament.

Mizzou As A No. 9 Seed In The Dance...

Missouri is a No. 9 seed in the NCAA Tournament for the fourth time in program history and the Tigers are 1-3 in those contests.

> Mizzou was last a No. 9 seed in 2001 and defeated No. 8 Georgia (70-68) in Greensboro, N.C., before falling to top-seeded Duke (94-81).

Year	Opponent (Seed / Round)	Results
2001	Georgia (8 / Round of 64)	W, 70-68
2000	North Carolina (8 / Round of 64)	L, 84-70
1981	Lamar (8 / Round of 64)	L, 71-67

Mizzou Dancing In The Blue Grass State

This won't be Missouri's first dance in the Blue Grass State ... The Tigers have twice played NCAA Tournaments in Kentucky over the years (both in Louisville), including a run to the Elite Eight in 1976 ... Missouri is 1-2 all-time in those three games, which date back to that 1976 campaign.

Year	Opponent (Seed / Round)	Results
1976	Michigan (NA / Elite Eight)	L, 95-88
1976	Texas Tech (NA / Sweet 16)	W, 86-75

Frank Haith in the NCAA Tournament...

Mizzou's 2013 NCAA Tournament appearance is the second under the direction of head coach Frank Haith ... In all, this is Haith's third trip to the Big Dance as a head coach after taking Miami to the NCAA Tournament second round in 2007-08 ... Haith is 1-2 in NCAA Tournament action as a head coach, but he has been a part of five other NCAA Tournaments in his coaching career, including helping Rick Barnes take Texas to a Final Four and a pair of Sweet 16 appearances from 2001-04 ... In all, Haith is 9-7 as a coach (assistant or head coach) in NCAA Tournament action ... Below is a breakdown.

Missouri – Head Coach
2012-13 – NCAA Second Round (23-10 overall)
2011-12 – NCAA Second Round (30-5 overall)

Miami – Head Coach
2007-08 – NCAA Second Round (23-11 overall)

Texas – Assistant Coach/Associate Head Coach
2003-04 – NCAA Sweet 16 (25-8)
2002-03 – NCAA Final Four (26-7)
2001-02 – NCAA Sweet 16 (22-12)

Wake Forest – Assistant Coach
2000-01 – NCAA Tournament First Round (19-11)

Penn State – Assistant Coach

Haith in March...

Heading into the NCAA Tournament, Mizzou head coach Frank Haith is 23-23 in the month of March, but he has seen a steady improvement in that record over the past four seasons, going 3-2 this season and 13-9 over his past four seasons, including an 11-6 mark over the last three Marches.

Mizzou Has Three Active 1,000-point Scorers...

Tiger seniors Laurence Bowers (1,241), Keion Bell (1,726) and Alex Oriakhi (1,155) have all topped 1,000 career points in their collegiate tenures, with both Bowers and Oriakhi accomplishing that feat this season.

> Oriakhi (UConn) and Bell (Pepperdine) started their careers elsewhere, but have made significant impacts for Missouri and rank among team leaders with 33 and 26 starts apiece.

> Bowers has been on the Tiger roster since the 2008-09 campaign and missed last season due to injury ... He currently ranks 26th on Missouri's all-time scoring list with his 1,241 points.

> It's the second consecutive year Missouri has had three active 1,000-point scorers ... Marcus Denmon (1,775), Kim English (1,570) and Mike Dixon (1,057) accomplished that feat last season.

> A fourth Tiger on the cusp of 1,000 points is Phil Pressey, who has 939 points in three seasons, needing just 61 tallies to reach that milestone.

Mizzou vs. The Field of 68...

Missouri was 5-5 vs. the field of 68 this season ... The Tigers faced seven teams in the field overall, including non-conference wins against No. 5-seeded VCU (68-65) and No. 7-seeded Illinois (82-73) on a neutral court ... Missouri enhanced its Big Dance resume on the strength of that non-league resume, which included games against No. 1-seeded Louisville, VCU, Illinois, No. 11-seeded Bucknell and an overtime loss at No. 6-seeded UCLA ... The Tigers also earned a quality SEC win at home vs. No. 3 Florida.

Tigers in Opening Round Games...

The Tigers are 12-13 overall in 25 NCAA Tournament opening round games in their history, dating back to the 1944 NCAA Tournament ... However, in the Tigers' last six NCAA Tournament appearances, they have won four of those match-ups ... In fact, Mizzou has won seven of its last 11 NCAA Opening Round games dating back to 1994 when it was the No. 1 overall seed in the West Region.

Tigers in the Midwest Region...

Missouri is making its ninth appearance in the NCAA Tournament's Midwest Region and the first in the region since 2003 ... Mizzou is 6-8 all-time in the Midwest, most recently going 1-1 in Indianapolis in a 72-71 win over No. 11-seeded Southern Illinois before falling to No. 3 Marquette (101-92) in OT.

> Missouri made its first Elite Eight out of the Midwest in 1976, beating Washington and Texas Tech before falling to Michigan ... The Texas Tech and Michigan games were played in Louisville, Ky.

About Colorado State...

Colorado State returns to the NCAA Tournament for the second consecutive year after earning a No. 11 seed last season ... The Rams are under the direction of Head Coach Larry Eustachy, who is taking his fourth team to the Big Dance (Utah State, Iowa State, Southern Miss and Colorado State) ... Colorado State is one of the country's top rebounding teams and senior Colton Iverson is leading the way with 14.7 points and 9.8 rebounds ... Iverson and Mizzou senior Laurence Bowers played on the same AAU team at times during high school ... CSU is balanced with four players averaging double figures, including Iowa State transfer Wes Eikmeier, who averages 12.7 points per game.

Colorado State vs. The Field of 68

Colorado State is a solid 4-7 vs. the field of 68 this year, with nine of those meetings coming in the Mountain West Conference ... Out of conference, CSU topped Montana at home (72-65) early in non-conference play and fell at rival Colorado (70-61) in Boulder.

Common Opponents

The two clubs have not faced any common opponents this season.

Series History

Missouri and Colorado State are 1-1 all-time in series history ... The two clubs split a home-and-home series starting in 1967 ... CSU won 64-52 in Fort Collins, Colo., on Dec. 21, 1967, and Missouri won Dec. 17, 1969, in Columbia by an 81-55 margin.

About Louisville...

The BIG EAST Tournament champion Louisville Cardinals grabbed the No. 1 seed in the Midwest Region and carry a 10-game winning streak into Lexington, Ky. ... Head Coach Rick Pitino's club won the final BIG EAST Tournament crown with double-digit wins against Villanova (74-55), Notre Dame (69-57) and Syracuse (78-61) in Madison Square Garden and have been dominant since that epic five-overtime loss at Notre Dame ... Russ Smith (18.1 ppg) leads Louisville in scoring and joins Peyton Siva to form one of the top backcourt duos in college hoops ... Together, the pair average a combined 28.1 points, 8.9 assists and 4.2 steals per game.

Louisville vs. The Field of 68

Louisville is an outstanding 11-4 vs. the NCAA Tournament field this season ... Included in that record is an 84-61 win over Missouri in the 2012 Battle 4 Atlantis on Nov. 23 in Nassau, Bahamas ... In league play the Cardinals were 8-4 vs. NCAA Tournament opponents, including six consecutive wins vs. NCAA foes to close the season.

Common Opponents

Other than the Nov. 23 Louisville win over Mizzou in the Battle 4 Atlantis, the two clubs do not share a common opponent this season.

Series History

The series between Missouri and Louisville is currently tied 2-2 ... Louisville of course won the first meeting this season and also won 71-49 on Jan. 18, 1981, in Louisville ... Missouri earned neutral site wins vs. the Cardinals on Jan. 17, 1982, in St. Louis (69-55) and on Nov. 25, 1989, in Lahaina, Hawaii, at the Maui Classic (82-79).

Neutral Court Success Under Haith...

Take Missouri's road stats, highlight them and press the delete button, because the games from here on out will be played on a neutral court and that's right up Mizzou's alley, especially under Head Coach Frank Haith.

> Missouri is 11-3 under Haith on a neutral court, including an impressive 4-1 mark vs. Top 25 opponents.

> Missouri is 4-2 on a neutral court this season, including impressive resume-building wins over then-No. 10 Illinois and VCU.

> Missouri is also 4-1 under Haith in the conference tournaments including last season's Big 12 title.

Opponent	Site	Outcome
Notre Dame	Kansas City	W, 87-58
#20 California	Kansas City	W, 92-53
Villanova	New York City	W, 81-71

Ole Miss	Nashville	L, 64-62

Oriakhi Is O-Mazing From The Floor...

Alex Oriakhi has been magnificent from the floor over his last six games, shooting an incredible 85 percent (34-of-40), including 13-of-14 shooting in a pair of postseason games at the SEC Tournament in Nashville.

> Oriakhi has reached double figures in five of those six games and has been perfect from the floor three times, including 7-of-7 shooting vs. Ole Miss on March 15.

> Overall Oriakhi is averaging 13.5 points and 7.7 rebounds in those six games and 16 of his 34 field goals during that stretch have been dunks.

Mizzou's Sixth Man Stars...

Michael Dixon led the country in bench scoring a season ago with 13.5 points per game and Earnest Ross has filled that role nicely, leading the SEC with 11.0 points per night off the pine.

> Ross is the lone player to average double figures off the bench in SEC play, with Kentucky's Kyle Wiltjer ranking just behind at 9.3 points per night ... Both Ross and Wiltjer came off the bench in 17-of-18 SEC games and Ross' lone start was at Ole Miss.

Going Streaking At Home...

Mizzou capped play at home with a perfect 17-0 mark and will carry an 18-game home court winning streak into the 2013-14 campaign.

> The perfect home court record was the ninth undefeated home season since 1970 and Missouri

Offensive Consistency For Mizzou...

Missouri, Indiana, Creighton, Duke and Florida are the only schools to rank among the Top 15 in offensive efficiency the last two seasons, but only Mizzou has done it with a revamped roster of talent … The Tigers led the country in offensive efficiency last year paced by seniors Kim English, Marcus Denmon, Ricardo Ratliffe and then-sophomore Phil Pressey, but the Tigers are back to No. 13 this season with four new starters and the returning Pressey leading the way.
> Both Creighton and Indiana are back in the Top 15 of offensive efficiency thanks to the return of four starters and both Duke and Florida has three starters back from its team a season ago.

Team	Returning Starters	Returning Scoring	Offensive Rank 2012 / 2013
Missouri	1	15.6%	1 / 13
Duke	3	53.8%	11 / 5
Florida	3	64.4%	3 / 5
Creighton	4	83.7%	5 / 7
Indiana	4	84.7%	4 / 1

Double-Doubles Fueling Tigers...

Missouri already has 22 point-rebound double-doubles this season (26 total double-doubles), bettering the number recorded by last season's team (nine) when Ricardo Ratliffe recorded eight and Marcus Denmon had one.
> The surge in double-doubles is a definite trend up for Missouri, who had not enjoyed more than 20 double-doubles as a team in one season since 1993-94.
> The Tigers have five players with at least one double-double this year, led by Alex Oriakhi who has 11, an improvement over previous campaigns.
> Phil Pressey has also recorded four point-assist double-doubles as well, scoring 12 points and dishing 11 dimes vs. Illinois, before breaking the school record with 19 assists and 19 points at UCLA ... He recently logged 27 points and 10 dimes at Kentucky.

Pressey Among National Leaders For Point-Assist Double-Doubles...

Phil Pressey recorded his fourth point-assist double-double of the year in the game at Kentucky, which ranks among national leaders in that category ... Among the country's Top 25 assist producers Pressey ranks seventh nationally with those four double-doubles.
> His 27 points and 10 dimes at Rupp Arena is also one of the country's more impressive scoring and assist efforts, topped by Marshall's DeAndre Kane who scored 33 points, dished 10 assists and grabbed 11 boards in a double overtime loss at Hofstra.

Ring The Bell...

Keion Bell has been one of Mizzou's most consistent players since the start of league play and ranked among league leaders in scoring (8th - 14.0), field goal percentage (1st - .579), and free throw percentage (3rd - 85.7) during league action.
> Bell has reached double figures in scoring in 12 of his last 17 regular-season games overall, despite missing two contests due to injury, and since the start of February (11 games) Bell paces the club in scoring with 13.8 points per game.
> The senior is shooting 55 percent from the floor and ranks third with 4.7 rebounds per game during that stretch.

Mizzou Arena Nightmare For The SEC...

Missouri was a perfect 17-0 at home this year and 9-0 vs. SEC opponents on Norm Stewart Court, but it was the way the Tigers won those games that made Mizzou Arena a terror dome for visiting teams.
> Missouri averaged a +15.6 PPG margin of victory vs. league opposition at home this season, including wins of 30 points vs. Arkansas, 16 points vs. Alabama, 17 vs. Georgia, 22 vs. Vanderbilt and 19 vs. No. 23 Ole Miss.
> Last season Missouri averaged a +12.5 ppg margin of victory against Big 12 teams, including six double-figure wins while going 8-1.
> Missouri is 38-4 vs. league opponents at Mizzou Arena since 2008-09, averaging a +14.1 ppg margin of victory.

Season	Record	Margin of Victory
2008-09	8-0	+20.4
2009-10	6-2	+7.1
2010-11	7-1	+14.8

Big Al Can't Miss Against South Carolina ...

No player in college basketball has ever been so perfect in two games against the same team ... Alex Oriakhi played two games vs. South Carolina this season and Big Al didn't miss a shot from the floor or the line, going a combined 10-of-10 on his field goal attempts and 16-of-16 from the charity stripe.
> In two games vs. the Gamecocks, Oriakhi averaged 18.0 points, 7.0 rebounds and 1.5 blocks.

Six In Double Figures For Mizzou...

Missouri Basketball is a rarity in college hoops this season with six players averaging in double figures for the now 23-10 Tigers … Mizzou is the lone high major team to have six players in double figures, although a few teams are close, including Kentucky, Iowa State, Oregon, Oregon State and NC State.

> It's the third consecutive year Missouri has at least five players in double figures … The 2011-12 squad had five players average 10.3+ points, including four average more than 13.5 points a night … The 2010-11 team had five players averaging 10.0 ppg or more.

> Mizzou also had back-to-back seasons with five players in double figures in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Pressey Breaks Assist Record...

Few players in Missouri history have made a bigger impact at the point guard position than Anthony Peeler, but Peeler's assist record has already been broken by junior point guard Phil Pressey and a second record, career steals, is also in jeopardy.

> Peeler, who played from 1988-92, held the school record for assists (497) until Pressey broke the mark on Feb. 9 vs. Ole Miss and Peeler is narrowly hanging on to the steals mark with 196.

> Pressey has recorded 233 assists and 58 steals this season and needs just four more thefts to break that career record as well.

> Included in Pressey's strong junior season was a school and SEC record 19 assists at UCLA on Dec. 28.

> He also tied the Mizzou Arena record with 13 assists in a win over Alabama in the SEC opener.

Oriakhi Near Perfect at Mizzou Arena...

Alex Oriakhi seldom talks about his offensive game, but the senior was near perfect offensively at home over his last 12 contests, starting with a Dec. 8 win over Tennessee State.

> Over his final 10 weeks of home games Oriakhi was 59-of-77 from the floor (.766) and averaged 13.7 points and 9.6 rebounds with six double-doubles and seven double-figure rebounding efforts.

> Not to be missed its Big Al's success at the foul line ... He is shooting 80.7 percent from the charity stripe during that stretch, hitting 46-of-57 attempts.

Mizzou's Wooden Award Top 25 Duo...

> Laurence Bowers and Phil Pressey were selected by the Los Angeles Athletic Club on Jan. 10 following great starts to the 2012-13 campaign.

> Bowers is averaging career highs of 14.4 points and 6.3 rebounds, while Pressey ranks No. 8 nationally with 7.1 assists per game.

Ross Responding...

Earnest Ross started the season's first nine games for Missouri, but found his niche coming off the bench in 21 of his last 22 outings ... Averaging 25.3 minutes a game for Frank Haith's squad this season, Ross is averaging 11.0 points and 5.0 rebounds off the pine, including 21 points and 10 rebounds in the Jan. 22 win over South Carolina and 23 points vs. Auburn on Feb. 2.

> Ross scored 19 points in the SEC opener vs. Alabama off the bench and had 16-point efforts against South Carolina State, UCLA and Arkansas.

> Ross has been much more efficient on the offensive end off the bench as well, shooting 42 percent from beyond the three-point line, with 39 triples during those 23 games.

Ross Comparison Starter vs. Key Reserve

Starter	Category	Reserve
8.5	PPG	11.0
5.3	RPG	5.0

Not So Friendly Confines...

Missouri Basketball is an outstanding 137-22 at home since the opening of Mizzou Arena in 2004 and its winning percentage (.862) actually trumps the win percentage of Hearnes Center (.848), which was the home to Tiger Basketball from 1972-2004.

> Missouri has enjoyed an 84-4 mark at home since 2008-09 (.955) and was a perfect 17-0 at home this year.

New League Debuts...

Missouri is one of college basketball's winningest programs, but oddly enough the first year in a new league had not been kind to the Tigers … Missouri is playing in its sixth conference and had enjoyed just one winning season in that first year in a new league, recording an 11-7 overall mark in 1928-29 as a member of the Big Six.

> Overall the Tigers are 52-66 (.441) combined in their first season as members of the Missouri Valley, Big Six, Big Seven, Big Eight and Big 12, but those fortunes have appeared to change with the club's 23-10 record this season.

Conference	First Year	Overall	League (Finish)
Mo. Valley	1907-08	8-10	0-5 (3rd)
Big Six	1928-29	11-7	7-3 (2nd)
Big Seven	1948-49	11-13	6-6 (4th)
Big Eight	1958-59	6-19	3-11 (8th)

SEC	2012-13	23-10	11-7 (5th)

Second Half Success...

Missouri has been much more efficient offensively in the second half of games this season and below is a statistical breakdown of how the Tigers are playing by half ... Overall this season Missouri has outscored its opponents by 185 points in the second half, compared to a 157-point scoring margin over the first 20 minutes.

1st Half	Category	2nd Half
35.2	Scoring Avg.	40.7
21.7	Reb Avg.	19.4

3.2	Steals	3.5
6.9	Turnovers	6.3

Pressey Breaks School Record...

Phil Pressey broke the Missouri school record with 19 assists in a Dec. 28 contest at UCLA, blowing past the previous record of 13 dimes shared by Melvin Booker (1993 vs. Illinois) and Stefhon Hannah (2006 vs. Coppin State).

> In addition, the 19 assists tied the SEC record shared by LSU's Kenny Higgs (1976-77) and Tennessee's Bill Hann (1967-68).

> It was also the most assists by a Power 6 Conference player since Mateen Cleaves (Michigan State) went for 20 in 2000 and was the most in a Division I game since 2008.

> Pressey broke the Pauley Pavilion assist record, eclipsing the 15 dimes recorded by the Bruin's Darrick Martin in 1991 vs. Pitt.

> The last player in basketball (college or NBA) to have exactly 19 points and 19 assists in a game was John

That's A Winner...

Missouri Basketball is one of college basketball's winningest programs over the last five seasons with its 130 wins since the 2008-09 campaign ranking ninth amongst high major programs … Missouri has twice won 30 games over the last four years, including 30 wins and a Big 12 title in 2011-12, its final year in the Big 12 Conference.

> Overall Missouri's 130 wins ranks 17th in college hoops and is second amongst current members of the Southeastern Conference (Kentucky with 145 wins).

Missouri Balance Under Haith

Frank Haith knows how to get contributions from a number of players and for the second consecutive year the head coach has great balance in the scoring column as six players are averaging double figures.

> And to add to it, four players are averaging career highs this season, as Laurence Bowers (14.4), Jabari Brown (13.7), Phil Pressey (11.6) and Alex Oriakhi (11.1) are scoring at a career rate ... The fifth and sixth Tigers averaging double figures are Earnest Ross (10.3) and Keion Bell (11.1), who have played well over the last two months.

> Missouri is the lone high major team in college hoops with six players averaging double digits in scoring and Missouri has used that balance to rank No. 13 nationally in offensive efficiency (KenPom.com).

> Oddly, despite having six players average double figures, Mizzou has not had six players reach double figures in a game this season.

> Missouri has had five players average double figures in scoring five times, including the 2010-11 and 2011-12 seasons.

The Dish On Flip's Record Assist Pace

Phil Pressey has six double-digit assist nights in his last 22 games and tied the Mizzou Arena record with 13 assists and 11 points in the SEC opener against Alabama.

> Pressey already owns the school record with six career points-assist double-doubles and his six games with 10+ assists this season follows his seven games with 10+ dimes a year ago ... The junior now has 14 career games with double-figures in assists.

> The Dallas native also recently broke his own single-season assist mark and now has 233 dimes, the sixth highest total in SEC history and just eight behind John Wall (Kentucky, 2009-10) and Terry Coner (Alabama, 1985-86) for No. 2 in league history with 241 ... Sean Tuohy (Ole Miss, 1979-80) holds the single-season mark with 260.

Haith's Tigers Tackle Top 10 Foes...

Head Coach Frank Haith's Tigers have played well vs. Top 25 opposition over the last two seasons racking up an 9-4 mark dating back to his first season of 2011-12.

> Missouri is also 5-3 vs. Top 10 teams under Haith and below is a breakdown of those Top 25 tilts.

What Can Brown Do For Mizzou...

> Brown has been a strong addition through 24 games, reaching double figures 18 times, including career highs of 23 points on 8-of-10 FGs at South Carolina and 23 points vs. Arkansas, 22 points on 5-of-7 three-point shooting in the SEC opener against Alabama and 21 points on 8-of-12 shooting vs. Vanderbilt.

> Brown has been especially effective on the road in SEC play scoring those 23 at South Carolina on Feb. 28, as well as 20 points at Mississippi State, 19 points at LSU and 16 at Florida.

> Brown is second on the team lead in scoring overall at 13.7 points a game and already leads the club with 53 three-point makes.

> In league play Brown was seventh in the conference in scoring (14.6 ppg) and made 38 percent of his treys, sixth in the conference.

Mizzou Mashers In The Middle...

Missouri is averaging 41.4 rebounds per game this season (No. 2 nationally), the highest total at the school since the 1990-91 campaign (42.7) ... That's 22 years since Mizzou has been this solid on the boards and the club has enjoyed a 40.0+ rebounds per game average just seven times since the 1990-91 season.

> That strength is a stark contrast for Mizzou over the last few years as the club boasted a positive rebounding margin just once (2011-12) since 2005-06.

> In addition, Missouri's rebounding margin of +9.6 is No. 3 nationally and the Tigers rank among national leaders (No. 19) with 13.7 offensive rebounds per night.

Winter To Remember For Bowers...

Laurence Bowers is back in the lineup after missing five games with a sprained MCL (right knee), but the injury hasn't slowed the redshirt senior's terrific season ... The Memphis native has led the Tigers to a 15-7 mark when in the lineup over the last two months and has topped double figures in scoring in 17 of those 22 games, including six 20-point efforts and five double-doubles.

> Bowers scored a career high 26 points in a win over Southeast Missouri State on Dec. 4 and enjoyed a 23-point, 10-rebound double-double in the Bud Light Braggin' Rights win over Illinois.

> Since returning from injury Bowers has played his best basketball over the last three weeks, including 17 points in the win over No. 4 Florida, a 23-point, 10-rebound double-double against LSU, 24 points (11 rebounds) vs. Arkansas on Senior night and 20 points and four blocked shots at Tennessee.

> In the Dec. 17 win over South Carolina State, Bowers scored 11 points to reach the 1,000-point plateau for his career and blocked two shots vs. Arkansas to reach 150 for his career ... Bowers is the second player in program history with 1,000 points and 150 career blocked shots, joining only Arthur Johnson (1,759 points, 245 blocks).

Early Rebounding Returns...

Missouri's new-look Tigers have been outstanding on the glass this year, winning the rebounding advantage in 27-of-33 games.

> Missouri owned the rebounding advantage just 17 times all of last season, including just once vs. high major opposition (Notre Dame) in non-conference play ... Below is a look at the Mizzou rebounding break down through 33 games over the last five seasons.

> In addition, Missouri ranks No. 2 nationally with 41.4 rebounds per contest and the team boasts a +9.6 rebounding margin per game.

> The Tigers also rank No. 19 nationally with 13.7 offensive rebounds per game.

Year	Rebounding Record	Advantage
2008-09	16-17	+11
2009-10	14-19	(-94)
2010-11	12-20-1	(-57)
2011-12	17-16	+43

Pressey Named All-Tournament

Phil Pressey was named to the Battle 4 Atlantis All-Tournament Team on Nov. 24 after helping the Tigers to wins over Stanford (78-70) and VCU (68-65) ... Pressey averaged a team-leading 14.7 points and shot an outstanding 53 percent (8-of-15) from three-point range during the tournament.

> The junior scored the game's final five points in the three-point win over VCU and scored 18 points, while dishing eight assists in the win against Stanford.

Oriakhi Flourishing At Mizzou

Alex Oriakhi won a national championship during his time at Connecticut, but the senior is playing some of the best basketball of his career at Missouri, averaging a career high 11.1 points to go with 8.6 rebounds through 33 games this season.

> Oriakhi's best year at UConn came as a sophomore when he averaged 9.6 points and 8.7 rebounds, but saw those numbers dip to 6.7 points and 4.8 boards last season prior to his transfer.

> Oriakhi recently registered his 1,000th career rebound vs. Arkansas on March 5 and scored his 1,000th career point in the Feb. 2 win over Auburn.

> The senior leads the team with 11 double-doubles, the most at Mizzou since Arthur Johnson had 18 in 2002-03.

> He also recently scored a career high 22 points and grabbed 18 boards in a 98-79 win over No. 23 Ole Miss, the first 20-18 game for a Tiger since Leo Lyons in 2007-08 (27 points, 18 rebounds).

Mizzou Arena - Home Sweet Home...

Mizzou is a perfect 73-0 in non-conference home games at Mizzou Arena since the end of the 2005-06 campaign ... Not only have the Tigers won 73 consecutive in non-league action, but they have done so in dominating fashion, sporting a 26.7 ppg margin of victory since the start of the 2006-07 campaign.

> The Tigers have played some impressive foes during that run as well, and own quality wins over Arkansas, Bucknell, California, Davidson, Georgia, Old Dominion, Oregon, Purdue, Murray State, Mississippi State, Vandy and others during that 73-game stretch.

Year	Record	Margin of Victory

Tigers Picked Third In SEC Preseason Poll...

Missouri was picked third in its inaugural SEC Preseason Media Poll on Oct. 22, ranking just behind defending national champion, Kentucky and Florida.

> The Tigers received a first-place vote as well and had junior Phil Pressey named the Preseason Player of the Year.

Preseason Media Poll	Pts

Junior Phil Pressey was named the Preseason SEC Player of the Year by the league media on Oct. 22.

> Pressey is the first Tiger to win Preseason Player of the Year recognition since Arthur Johnson in 2003 by the Big 12 Conference.

> Pressey is making the league media look good as well, leading the conference in assists per game (7.1), while ranking among league leaders in scoring (11.9) and steals (1.8).

Protecting The Rock...

Since the beginning of the 2007-08 season, Mizzou has been one of the best nationally at protecting the basketball ... In fact, since 2007-08, Missouri has enjoyed its five best turnover-free seasons in school history and with Phil Pressey back, that number is ranking high once again in 2013.

> Last year Missouri averaged just 12.7 miscues per game, the second lowest turnover average in school history and is at a respectable 13.2 miscues despite playing high-pressure teams such as Florida, Louisville, VCU and Alabama.

6.	13.2	2012-13
7.	13.3	1999-00
8.	13.7	1989-90

NBA Pedigree...

Every basketball player has the dream of playing in the NBA and Phil Pressey's father, Paul Pressey, has achieved that dream.

> Paul Pressey, now an assistant coach for the Cleveland Cavaliers, is widely considered the original point forward in the NBA and was named first or second team All-Defense in the league three times ... Pressey played for Milwaukee, San Antonio and Golden State in his career which spanned 1983-93.

> Should the younger Pressey reach his NBA dreams they would become the ninth father-son tandem to play in the NBA.

Winningest Four & Five-Year Stretches at Mizzou...

Missouri Basketball is looking to continue its impressive winning trend over the last five seasons, which has seen the club win 130 games since the start of the 2008-09 campaign.

> The Tigers have now won 20 games in five consecutive years (a new school record), including a school-record 31 wins during a memorable run to the Elite Eight in 2008-09 and 30 wins in 2011-12, highlighted by its final Big 12 title.

> The 130 wins over the last five seasons is the most in school history.

If You Build it...

Missouri Basketball broke the Mizzou Arena attendance record once again in 2013, averaging 11,996 fans per game, eclipsing the 2011-12 mark of 11,830 fans ... Missouri has seen its attendance numbers increase in five consecutive years.

More Ways Than One, Mizzou SEC's Newest Team...

We all know that Missouri and Texas A&M joined the Southeastern Conference making the two programs the newest in the league, but did you know that Tiger players have just five total seasons of experience in Missouri uniforms (i.e. letters won at their current school), making Frank Haith's club the newest in the SEC?

> Laurence Bowers played three seasons at Mizzou before sitting out last year and the only other Tiger ever to suit up for Mizzou is Phil Pressey, who enters his junior season … Overall Missouri's five seasons of play (at Mizzou) is the fewest in the conference.

Roster breakdown of years of play at SEC programs:

Missouri	5
Kentucky	8
Vanderbilt	9
Mississippi State	10
Arkansas	11
LSU	11
Alabama	12
Texas A&M	13
Georgia	14
Ole Miss	14
South Carolina	16
Tennessee	16
Auburn	17
Florida	17

Welcome Back...

It was a long road for two of Missouri's newcomers ... The tandem of Keion Bell and Earnest Ross saw their first action in well over a year on Nov. 10 when they earned starts in the opener against SIUE on ... Both players sat out last season due to NCAA transfer rules and halted streaks of 600+ days since their last regular-season game action.

Tiger	Days	Opponent	Date
Keion Bell	646	at St. Mary's	2-3-11
Earnest Ross	611	vs. Georgia	3-10-11

Taller Tigers Battle New Challenge...

Missouri fans will immediately notice the improved height and depth on this year's roster, but did you know the 2012-13 Tigers are the tallest at the school since 1995-96? ... That's right, not since the days of Slim and Slam (Simeon and Sammie Haley) have the Tigers had this many players standing at least 6-foot-9 … Overall Missouri has five players standing 6-foot-9 plus this season, the most at the school since the Tigers had six 17 seasons ago.

Season	Players 6-foot-9 or Taller
1995-96	6
2012-13	5
1996-97	4
2000-01	4
2002-03	4

In addition, Missouri has two players taller than 6-foot-10 on the roster… The last time that occurred was 1998-99 with 6-foot-11 post players Monte Hardge and Pat Schumacher.

Pressey Named First Team All-American...

CBS Sports named Missouri Basketball junior Phil Pressey a Preseason First Team All-American ... A finalist for the 2012 Bob Cousy Award, Pressey helped lead Mizzou to a 30-5 record last season and shattered the school mark with 223 assists over 35 games.

> Pressey was one of college basketball's busiest players over the summer participating in the LeBron James, Chris Paul and Deron Williams elite camps.

> As a sophomore he was a First Team All-Big 12 pick by CBS Sports and averaged career highs in scoring (10.3), rebounding (3.3), assists (6.4) and steals (2.1).

Transfers Have Been Good To Mizzou...

Missouri fans know the value of quality four-year transfers and have enjoyed a number of great memories courtesy of some key "short-timers" over the last 15 years … Below is a quick list of players that have finished their careers at Missouri over recent years and made big impacts in Black & Gold:

Zaire Taylor, 2008-10 (Delaware)

DeMarre Carroll, 2007-09 (Vanderbilt)

Jason Conley, 2003-05 (VMI)

Albert White, 1997-99 (Michigan)

Led Mizzou in scoring (16.3) and helped the club to the 1999 NCAA tournament.

Missouri Among Rare Company For Wins...

Missouri Basketball is one of just 12 teams in college hoops with multiple 30-win seasons over the last four years … The Tigers of course won 30 games a year ago en route to a Big 12 title, but also won a school record 31 games in 2008-09 … That feat puts the Tigers in rare company along with: BYU, Connecticut, Duke, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisville, Murray State, North Carolina, Ohio State, Syracuse and Utah State as the only schools to enjoy multiple 30-win seasons since 2008-09.

Transfer Of Opportunity...

Missouri has just two players on its 2012-13 roster with a season of experience in a Mizzou uniform … Coming into the year only Laurence Bowers and Phil

Pressey had ever donned the Black & Gold and will be relied upon to assist a number of new faces for their first campaign as Tigers … Of Missouri's 14 players, 11 will be eligible for their first season of play at Mizzou and a 12th, Jordan Clarkson, will sit out the year after transferring from Tulsa.

> However it's not like that group of newcomers is inexperienced … Five of those 11 have played at the Division I level … Keion Bell is a 1,400-point scorer from his days at Pepperdine and now at Mizzou, Tony Criswell played at UAB, Alex Oriakhi won a NCAA crown at Connecticut (2011) and Earnest Ross was Auburn's leading scorer in 2011.

The Replacements...

No team has more transfer firepower entering its program this season than Missouri … And that's great, because it's not likely another team lost more critical players off its club from last season than the Tigers … Missouri welcomes four highly thought of four-year transfer players into the fold this year as Keion Bell, Jabari Brown, Alex Oriakhi and Earnest Ross become eligible after the departure of senior standouts Marcus Denmon, Kim English, Steve Moore, Matt Pressey and Ricardo Ratliffe.

> Overall that group of seniors accounted for 1,979 points (70 percent), 942 rebounds (84 percent) and 4,967 minutes of play (71 percent) and Denmon, English, Pressey and Ratliffe started all 35 games.

> However Missouri was strategic of its recruitment of transfers and welcomes in Bell who scored 1,365 points in three seasons of Pepperdine, Oriakhi who helped lead UConn to a national title in 2011, Ross who was Auburn's leading scorer and rebounder in 2011 and former Jordan Brand All-American Brown … Combined (Brown has only played two career games) that group averaged 44.8 points and 17.6 rebounds per game during their most recent season of college basketball, so the Tigers have some important pieces entering in 2012-13.

Thank You Seniors...

Missouri graduated the winningest senior class in school history last year as the collection of Marcus Denmon, Kim English, Steve Moore and Jarrett Sutton, not to mention Laurence Bowers, who returns in 2012-13, and junior college transfers Matt Pressey and Ricardo Ratliffe combined to help the school win 107 games since 2008-09 … The Tigers twice won 30 games in that four year stretch and helped the program to four consecutive NCAA Tournament appearances, tying a school record.

> Another fact that shouldn't be lost is that six of those seven seniors have already graduated and a seventh is just a handful of hours away and is competing professionally.

Masters Of Mizzou...

Missouri is no stranger to having graduates finish up their final season of eligibility on the basketball court … Last season Jarrett Sutton worked towards his graduate degree while playing his final season on the hardwood and in 2010 Zaire Taylor walked across the stage in December only to have a final semester of eligibility remaining … In 2009 DeMarre Carroll worked towards his graduate degree while helping the Tigers to a school record 31 wins … This season Laurence Bowers will work towards his Masters while also finishing up on the hardwood … Bowers missed last season due to a knee injury, but that didn't stop the now fifth-year senior from taking care of business in the classroom … Bowers finished with a grade-point average above a 3.0 and is working towards his Masters in Public Administration.

Hoops In August...

"Look Kids… there's Big Ben, there's Parliament" … No, Holiday Road was not the soundtrack of Missouri's European trip this summer, but the Tigers did get some valuable experience playing with 10 new performers during the five games overseas … Despite having so many new faces Mizzou once again showed great balance during its tour of The Netherlands, Belgium and France, having five players in double figures and eight players average 10.5 minutes or more of playing time.

> Departed senior Mike Dixon led the Tigers in scoring at 16.5 points per game, but newcomers Keion Bell (12.0), Earnest Ross (11.8), Alex Oriakhi (11.3) and Jabari Brown (10.0) were just behind the senior all-league candidate.

> Mizzou also dominated the glass vs. their European counterparts, owning a 46.2-to-30.0 rebounding advantage … Ross (9.3) and Oriakhi (8.3) lead the way and freshman Ryan Rosburg added 11 points and 10 boards vs. The Netherlands National B Team.

Tigers Add Top 20 Signing Class...

Mizzou Head Coach Frank Haith announced the signing of a nationally-ranked recruiting class on Nov. 14 as Wes Clark (6-0, 175, Romulus, Mich. / Romulus H.S.), Torren Jones (6-8, 215, Chandler, Ariz. / La Lumiere School (Ind.)) and Johnathan Williams, III (6-9, 210, Memphis, Tenn. / Southwind H.S.), signed national letters of intent to play for the Tigers next season.

NOTING MIZZOU HEAD COACH FRANK HAITH

In his inaugural season with the University of Missouri basketball program, Frank Haith led his program to new heights. Not only did the 26-year coaching veteran bring in regional ties, a family atmosphere and impeccable academic success, he helped the Tiger program step back into the national spotlight.

Despite having a roster which featured just seven scholarship players, Haith and his staff guided the Tigers to a 30-5 overall record in 2011-12, marking just the second 30-win season in MU history. Mizzou, picked fourth in the Big 12 Conference pre-season coaches' poll, won a school-record 14 league games, and finished second in the conference standings with a 14-4 mark. The Tigers won the school's second Big 12 Tournament Championship with a 3-0 run in Kansas City, before advancing to the NCAA Tournament.

With his record-setting first season in the books, Haith received recognition in the form of numerous coaching accolades. After earning the Big 12 Coach of the Year title, Haith was named U.S. Basketball Writers Association District VI Coach of the Year. As a first-year coach, Haith guided his team to more regular season wins than any other Mizzou coach before him and became the first Tiger head coach since 1920-21 to win his first 14 games.

The honors continued to roll in for Haith as he was given the prestigious Henry Iba Coach of the Year Award, presented annually to the National Coach of the Year by the U.S. Basketball Writers Association. He was also named the Associated Press College Basketball Coach of the Year, becoming just the third head coach at Missouri to win national Coach of the Year honors.

Haith was officially welcomed to the Missouri family on April 5, 2011, and immediately appreciated the Tiger's passionate fan base. The Burlington, N.C., native came from the University of Miami where he was not only forced to instill a winning mentality to his players and supporters, but do it at a university void of any lengthy basketball tradition.

"Being the head coach at the University of Missouri is such an honor and it's something that has become more and more meaningful during our time here," Haith said. "Obviously the passionate fanbase is what grabbed my attention first, but the support of the administration, the support of our community and the support of our students is second to none.

"We have the complete package here and that's what sets us apart in college basketball. We have incredible facilities, we have a national brand when we go out on the road and Missouri has shown, time and time again, it supports its teams with vigor, but also in a first-class manner."

Haith's task in South Beach was monumental. In addition to resurrecting a hoops program that was restarted just two decades prior, he ushered the Hurricanes into the tradition-rich Atlantic Coast Conference where many didn't expect his program to win a single league game. Those critics were wrong.

In his first of seven seasons as the head coach, Haith guided the 'Canes to seven ACC victories (despite being picked last) and qualified for postseason play. He was recognized by being named a Naismith National Coach of the Year finalist and NABC District 6 Coach of the Year.

Miami returned to postseason play the following year. The Hurricanes won 18 more games and advanced to the quarterfinals of the NIT, recording the program's first postseason wins since 2000. Postseason success was a theme under Haith. His teams won six total games in the NCAA and National Invitation tournaments, including a memorable run to the second round of the Big Dance in 2008. The 'Canes went 23-11 in Haith's fourth season, just one win shy of the school record and he was named a finalist for ACC Coach of the Year and the Skip Prosser Man of the Year honors.

And it's not just on the hardwood where Haith has fueled incredible growth amongst his players. During his time at both Missouri and Miami his players were visible in the community and Haith has seen an incredible 28-of-30 seniors to play for him walked across the stage to receive a diploma.

"That's my proudest moment," Haith said. "To know we churn out young men, ready to make positive contributions in the community, ready to be great fathers and husbands. That's what coaching at the college level is all about."

It's not an accident Frank Haith was hired as the 17th basketball coach at Mizzou. The grind from student-assistant at Elon College to being named the National Recruiter of the Year by Rivals.com doesn't just happen without a dedication to family, career and your student-athletes.

Haith paid his own way through Elon and graduated in 1988. He helped the Fighting Christians twice win 20 games and earned the opportunity to cut his teeth at perennial power Wake Forest the following year as a graduate assistant. His first full-time coaching position at Division I came at UNC-Wilmington from 1990-92 and he laid the foundation for his job at Missouri with a three-year stop at Texas A&M from 1992-95, which included helping the Aggies reach postseason play in 1994.

A remarkable 21-win campaign during his one season at Penn State (1995-96) allowed the Nittany Lions to reach the NCAA Tournament for the first time in 31 years, and he returned to Texas A&M and the Big 12 Conference for one season as the Aggies' Associate Head Coach in 1996-97 before returning to Wake Forest from 1997-98. The Demon Deacons reached postseason play each of his four years in Winston-Salem, including winning the NIT Championship in 2000 and reaching NCAA Tournament play in 2001.

Haith parlayed that success at Wake Forest into an opportunity at the University of Texas. Coaching alongside friend and mentor Rick Barnes, Haith was a part of (at the time) the winningest three-year stretch in Texas Basketball history. The Longhorns averaged better than 24 wins per season and never failed to reach the Sweet 16 of the NCAA Tournament. The Longhorns advanced to the Final Four in 2003 and Haith worked magic on the recruiting trail, ushering four McDonald's All-Americans to Austin, including Brad Buckman (2002), LaMarcus Aldridge (2004), Daniel Gibson (2004) and Michael Williams (2004). Aldridge and Gibson are now mainstays in the NBA, with Aldridge being drafted No. 2 overall to the Chicago Bulls. The Class was rated No. 2 nationally by Rivals.com and Haith was the nation's hottest young coach. So began the daunting reclamation project at Miami, which concluded with an average of 21 wins over his last three years, national rankings in three of his final four campaigns and three of the school's six (all-time) 20-win ledgers.

One of 10 siblings, family will always be first for Frank Haith, and his student-athletes are part of that family. A proud father and husband, Frank and his wife Pam are the parents of two children, Corey and Brianna and his son is walking onto the Mizzou program this year.

Frank and Pam met in high school, began dating a short time after and have been together for 28 years. The Haith family is an active participant in its home communities and spearheaded fund-raising and renovation efforts for Morningside Park in Elon, N.C., in the neighborhood in which Haith grew up. In Columbia, the family is actively involved with the Boys & Girls Club of the Columbia Area.

2012-13 MISSOURI BASKETBALL CLIPS PACKET

KC Star: Tigers Open Season With Mizzou Madness (10/11)
By Terez Paylor

COLUMBIA -- Frank Haith is not what he calls a "hoopla guy," so when he was presented with the idea of hosting an event that would eventually be called Mizzou Madness, well, let's just say Missouri's men's basketball coach was not enthused.

"My arm had to be twisted a little bit," laughed Haith, who admitted he'd rather conduct a normal practice.

But on Wednesday, Haith — who was conducting his first news conference of the school year — willingly spoke about the virtues of the fan-oriented event, which takes place at 7 p.m. Friday at Mizzou Arena.

"We had a great season last year, and it's really something to give back to our fans," said Haith, whose Tigers went 30-5 last season. "We're getting some national exposure out of this deal, which is a neat thing."

The event — featuring scrimmages for both the men's and women's teams, plus giveaways and a slam-dunk contest — will be televised on ESPN3, while certain segments will be rebroadcast on ESPN's "Midnight Madness."

It will be another opportunity for the spotlight to shine on a program that hasn't lacked for preseason hype. Junior point guard Phil Pressey was recently named a preseason first-team All-American by CBS Sports, while senior shooting guard Michael Dixon was named a second-team All-American by The Sporting News, which listed MU 10th in its preseason top 25.

All this despite the fact the Tigers lost five of their top seven contributors from last season, including guards Kim English and Marcus Denmon, who were both taken in the second round of the NBA Draft.

That leaves only Dixon and Pressey, who will join senior forward Laurence Bowers (who sat out last season with a knee injury), four talented transfers (guard Keion Bell, center Alex Oriakhi, forwards Jabari Brown and Earnest Ross) and a five-man recruiting class to form the core of a team that is long on talent and depth but is developing chemistry.

"You can have a lot of talented players, but if it doesn't mesh well, you're not going to have a very good basketball team," Haith said. "Those guys will all have some different roles than what they had on their previous teams."

Haith said the task of getting players to accept their roles ultimately falls on him, but replacing the leadership that English and Denmon brought to the table last season would be key.

"I would like for Phil and Laurence to be our leaders," Haith said. "Sometimes that has to work itself out."

Haith added that Bell, a senior, has also displayed some leadership ability. However, Haith reiterated that he's spent a lot of time urging Pressey — who is expected to emerge as the team's alpha dog — to assume that mantle.

"He's growing into that," Haith said, adding that it was tough for his point guard to do it fully last year because of the presence of so many senior contributors.

However, Pressey's leadership will be just one of the things Haith analyzes on Friday. The event is meant to be fun, sure, but you better believe Haith and his staff will be coaching the players hard. Expectations are high, and it's time to get to work.

"It's not going to be like a pickup game," Haith said. "They are going to be coached."

Columbia Tribune: Mizzou Tips It Off with Mizzou Madness (10/11)
By Steve Walentik

COLUMBIA -- Forget the autograph sessions, choreographed introductions, even the dunk contest. Frank Haith would just as soon skip the hoopla that will take place tomorrow night as Missouri kicks off the college basketball season with Mizzou Madness.

"I'd rather be, 'Let's roll up our sleeves and let's get to work,' " said Haith, no doubt echoing the sentiments of a lot of college coaches on the first day the NCAA allows them to practice in full with their teams.

Haith went against his own wishes and agreed to the event, set to begin at 7 p.m. at Mizzou Arena, because he said it presented a small way to pay back people who supported him and his team through a 30-5 season in his first year on the bench and also gives a roster filled with newcomers a chance to meet the MU faithful.

The player most excited to see the fans in the stands will be the one they know best of all: fifth-year senior forward Laurence Bowers, who sat out last season while recovering from a torn anterior cruciate ligament suffered less than two weeks before the start of practice last fall.

"It's been a long time, around 17-18 months," Bowers said of the last time he got to play in front of spectators in a 2011 loss to Cincinnati in the opening round of the NCAA Tournament. "So it'll be very exciting.

"I love the fans here. Everywhere I go" people say, " 'Bowers, can't wait to see you get back.' Well, this will be the first time they get to see me. I don't want to disappoint."

Physically, Bowers, who now packs 227 pounds on his 6-foot-8 frame, is ready to play with his surgically repaired knee fully healed. He said he battled tendinitis earlier in his recovery but is no longer feeling any discomfort and is able to run, cut and jump without any problems.

Bowers actually received full clearance to play in late July, though he's still been cautious, which is why he sat out competition during the team's exhibition trip to Europe in August. The high-flying forward also will leave the slam dunk competition to players such as Keion Bell, Phil Pressey and freshman Stefan Jankovic tomorrow.

"I might get a few dunks in the game or whatnot," he said.

Pressey warned not to expect Bowers to look exactly like the player who averaged 11.6 points and 6.1 rebounds and swatted 62 shots as a junior when practice gets going.

"He's back playing, but I feel like it's going to take a while for him to get his mojo back where how he used to do his layups and jumping and just game play," Pressey said.

Haith and his staff are confident he'll get there. They are looking to him for leadership and some scoring punch as he steps into the position in the lineup manned by his former classmate Kim English along the frontline.

It was because of the success English had playing out of position at that spot — where he averaged 14.5 points and shot 45.9 percent from beyond the 3-point arc — that some hypothesized that Bowers' injury, seemingly devastating when it occurred, was actually a blessing. There's no question it helped define roles for Missouri's remaining scholarship players and forced the Tigers to adopt an unconventional look.

But Haith was adamant that he was still missed.

"We would have loved to have Laurence Bowers on our team last year," Haith said. "He's got that game where he's very versatile. He can do a lot of different things. He's a stat-sheet stuffer. He blocks shots, he gets steals, he gets assists, he gets rebounds, he can score, and he's very gifted on the defensive end in terms of just moving his feet and helpside and rotation.

"I'm excited about Laurence Bowers and what he's going to bring to this team."

Bowers is thankful he gets to bring it in his natural role as a face-up forward.

There was a time during his recovery when Haith talked to him about the possibility of manning the middle the way Ricardo Ratliffe did last season. But the addition of Connecticut transfer Alex Oriakhi changed that.

He is just one piece to a rebuilt frontline that also includes junior college transfer Tony Criswell and freshmen Jankovic and Ryan Rosburg.

"I almost cried when Alex Oriakhi committed. I was so excited," Bowers said.
"I think we'll work great together. He's a defensive guy, and I consider myself a defensive guy. He's offensively capable, but that's not his focus. That's one of my focuses. … We already kind of have chemistry, just from the little time we've practiced together, so I'm looking forward to playing with him."

Columbia Tribune: New Tigers In Discovery Phase (11/14)
By Joe Waljasper

Last year, Frank Haith started his tenure as Missouri's basketball coach with a numbers problem. He didn't have many players, and they weren't big enough. But the guys he inherited quickly figured out how to play together with a style that confounded larger, deeper teams.

This year, it's the opposite. Haith has a roster that looks good on paper and in uniform. But at any given time, the five on the floor interact as if they just met.

That was the case during a disjointed first half against Alcorn State last night at Mizzou Arena. The Tigers awkwardly attacked a zone defense and frustrated themselves with errant point-blank shots. But a check of the final score — 91-54 — indicated Missouri sorted itself out just fine against an overmatched opponent.

For the first month of every basketball season, a team is constantly compared to the one that came before. In Missouri's case, there is more contrast than comparison. The only holdover currently suiting up is point guard Phil Pressey. The extraordinary teamwork of that senior-laden lineup isn't going to be duplicated by this mixture of transfers and freshmen. It just isn't.

And this group already has one more significant player conduct problem than Haith dealt with all of last year. That's the MIA Mike Dixon, whose unexplained suspension drags on, with Haith giving no indication when or if it will end or if it is even his decision to make. Dixon was, perhaps will be again, but isn't currently Missouri's second-best player. He is the kind of get-his-own-shot guard who can single-handedly put a stop to offensive droughts like the team experienced in the first 20 minutes last night ... but not if he is hanging out at the end of the bench with the equipment managers.

Even without him, the Tigers have an impressive collection of athletes. They are way bigger and more explosive than last year's bunch, which could go games without a dunk. Alex Oriakhi appears to be carved from granite — his hands included, unfortunately — and Earnest Ross isn't buying dress shirts off the rack. They both muscled their way to 10 rebounds last night.

One year after asking the 6-foot-6 Kim English to defend power forwards, Haith is tinkering with using 6-11 freshman Stefan Jankovic as a small forward. Laurence Bowers' transition to the perimeter in Haith's four-out, one-in offensive system looks like a success. The 6-8 Bowers hasn't fully regained his leaping ability a year after anterior cruciate ligament surgery, but he has found a nice outside jump shot, which he translated into three 3-pointers last night.

The Tigers began to pull away when the two players most familiar with each other worked in tandem. Pressey found Bowers for a 3-pointer and a dunk five minutes into the second half, as MU turned a seven-point halftime lead into a laugher.

The players howled with delight when Jankovic threw down a dunk and drew a technical for taunting. Haith didn't look so mirthful. Afterward, he also complained about his players stepping out of the way on defense rather than taking charges, which was a hallmark of last year's team. Those days are over, of course, but these Tigers could still learn a few lessons from their elders.

Kansas City Star: Jankovic Gives Tigers New Weapon (11/15)
By Terez Paylor

Stefan Jankovic cut toward the baseline, saw his path for a dunk was clear and leapt toward the rim.

It was late in the second half of Missouri's 91-54 win over Alcorn State on Tuesday and Jankovic — the Tigers' lanky 6-foot-11 freshman forward — had no idea that he was about to make the Top 10 plays on ESPN's "SportsCenter."

"I didn't think anyone was going to jump," Jankovic said.

But someone did. And Jankovic's one-handed slam over the defender encapsulated the reason Missouri coach Frank Haith chose not to redshirt him.

"We all know Stefan's talent," Haith said. "You have to look at the big picture for our team."

Right now, Haith sees a group that is much deeper than last season but still needs help on the perimeter, particularly with the uncertain status of senior guard Michael Dixon Jr., who remains suspended indefinitely for a violation of team rules.

That's where Jankovic — who played post early in camp but has since been moved to the perimeter — comes in. He and freshman Negus Webster-Chan will be counted on to provide valuable minutes this season.

"He is a luxury because he is probably one of the better shooters on our team," Haith said of Jankovic. "Even at the three spot, he makes great passes because he can see over the defense. He can skip the ball … and he can finish."

Just like he showed on Tuesday. Jankovic punctuated the dunk with a little trash talk, for which he was assessed a technical foul.

"The PG version would probably be 'maybe next time,'" Jankovic said with a laugh when asked what he said to the defender.

Junior point guard Phil Pressey said he's excited to see how Jankovic, who is two for four from three-point range, can continue to help space the floor.

"He's a 6-11 shooter so not a lot of guys can contest his shot," Pressey said. "He's gonna help us out a lot this year."

But while Jankovic, who is averaging 7.5 points and three rebounds in MU's two victories, has gained some degree of notoriety for his scoring ability — he emulates famous Serbians Peja Stojakovic and Vlade Divac — he knows the one area he better shore up is his defense.

As you might imagine, it's not easy playing on the perimeter at 6-11.

"I'm not going to lie, it's been a struggle," said Jankovic, who moved to Canada from Serbia and played the three position in high school and on his AAU team. "(These guys) are fast — I'm 6-11 and they're 6-4, but I'm picking it up. I tend to come up (to guard) too close, but I have a 7-2 wingspan and I tend to not use it. Coach Haith has been telling me to give them space, make them shoot (over me)."

But while Jankovic may be a work in progress defensively, there's little doubt the coaching staff, his teammates and even Jankovic himself are encouraged by his strong start.

"I want to see how I do against stiffer competition," Jankovic said. "But I'm really confident on the wing."

St. Louis Post-Dispatch: Ross Finds His Home at Mizzou (11/20)
By Stu Durando

Recounting the many far-flung locales that his family made home while he was growing up, Earnest Ross managed to skip a stop that was among the most exotic on his relocation timeline.

"I forgot, my brother was born in Hawaii," he said. "I forgot about Hawaii. I was so little."

With both parents in the Navy, the first move came before Ross was 6 months old when they left his birthplace in Guam for Seattle. A theme for his life had been established.

Mizzou's 6-foot-5 guard has lived in eight states, some a second or third time, so transferring from Auburn after the 2010-11 season wasn't a particularly big disruption. He has settled in for a three-year stay that he hopes is more memorable than his time in Hawaii.

After sitting out a season, Ross is Mizzou's third-leading scorer with a 13.3 average and second-leading rebounder at 6.3 as the Tigers prepare to play in the Battle 4 Atlantis starting Thursday. The trip to the Bahamas will be a new adventure for the well-traveled junior.

After living in Seattle, the Ross family moved to Chicago, Maryland, Texas and North Carolina. Where Hawaii fits into that chronology, Ross is uncertain. The family returned to Chicago twice, thus that is where Ross feels the strongest connection.

"Moving around everywhere made the adjustment coming here so much easier," Ross said. "Location was not a problem for me. Moving so much shaped my mind to broaden my horizons as far as universities when I transferred."

Coach Frank Haith expects a lot out of the powerful guard. Ross led Auburn in scoring and rebounding two years ago and was a steady defender, who averaged 1.4 steals. He was just beginning to blossom offensively as the season concluded, scoring a career-high 30 against Georgia.

At Mizzou, Ross has been a good fit in a backcourt in need of scorers. The departure of Marcus Denmon and suspension of Michael Dixon have left an offensive gap he has helped fill after averaging 13.1 points as a sophomore.

"If he gets going he can run them off," Haith said. "The biggest growth I want to see in Earnest is being patient and letting the game come to him. I think he's shown some growth in that. If you're patient you'll have opportunities and there's no need to take a tough shot."

Ross appears to have improved his perimeter shooting after making only 30 percent of his 3-pointers at Auburn. Including the Tigers' two exhibition games, he has hit 12 of 25 in a Mizzou uniform.

Moving around as a youth, Ross said he learned different styles of basketball in different cities. Chicago coaches emphasized getting to the basket on offense, while North Carolina coaches stressed shooting.

And because he was never in one place very long, he was constantly adjusting.

"It's a different ballgame each place you go," he said. "It was hard to stay on the team when you're moving around so much. I'd go try out and then not even be there to see the cuts, not even play in the season. My mom would put me in leagues to keep me active and keep the game in me. But I didn't really start playing organized basketball until my freshman year of high school."

Ross averaged 26 points as a junior and 21 as a senior, and Haith was among those who recruited him. So, when Ross decided to transfer in May 2011 he was immediately drawn to Mizzou, where Haith had been hired the previous month.

"When I met the players I made my mind up right there," he said. "When my visit ended, I felt I didn't even want to leave."

Ross sat out the 2011-12 season along with Keion Bell and Jabari Brown but was able to practice and learn the system. He accepted that scoring was not necessarily going to be his biggest emphasis. Yet, Haith recently didn't discount the possibility that Ross could lead the team in scoring.

He will certainly be familiar with many of the defenses he sees. When Ross decided on Mizzou, the Tigers were in the Big 12. Now in the Southeastern Conference, he will face players and coaches he played against for two years.

"Not only do I feel I'm back at home, but being in the conference I already played makes the game a lot easier," he said. "I'm just looking forward to playing schools I've played before."

St. Louis Post-Dispatch: Pressey Gets Crash Course On New Teammates (11/26)
By Stu Durando

Everywhere he looks on the court or down the bench, Mizzou point guard Phil Pressey is surrounded by new teammates.

Last year he started every game with the same four by his side and familiarity was ingrained. But in the opening weeks of his junior year, Pressey is continuing to get acquainted with the tendencies and habits of the new-look Tigers.

That made the Battle 4 Atlantis an important crash course in which he played all but 10 minutes of three games in little more than 48 hours and came away with a better understanding of the details he needs to make things work.

"It's a good way to start the season because you're playing against three good teams and we got tested," Pressey said. "Every single game I learned something new about every one of my teammates. Games were so close and it tested a lot of us, and I got to see how some teammates react when adversity hits. When it comes down to it, I know my teammates are going to perform."

He was elated with junior college transfer Tony Criswell after he dove on the floor to win a loose ball late in a tight game. He appeared stern with Earnest Ross after delivering a pass on a fast break that he felt the former Auburn standout should have caught but sailed out of bounds.

Those are moments Pressey will file away for future reference as Mizzou progresses in a season that still presents an abundance of question marks.

But the Tigers' performance in the Bahamas would have to be classified as satisfactory after they beat two solid teams that are not in the national rankings and were beaten handily by No. 2 Louisville, which fell to Duke in the championship game.

"I'm happy we won this game," MU forward Laurence Bowers said after the VCU win, "but as a competitor you want to win (them all). We fell short in the second game, but we responded well. VCU is a great team and for us to beat them I think says something."

Although it's a cliché, Mizzou is the perfect example of a team that should improve with each month. The melding of so many new parts is likely to take time.

But some tendencies are becoming clear:

• Pressey has become vital not only in running the offense but point production. He leads the team with a 15-point average and was the player the Tigers looked to down the stretch against VCU after sealing the win over Stanford with free throws.

"I don't look at myself as a go-to scorer, but when an opportunity presents itself I try to be a playmaker," he said. "Playmaking leads to a lot of stuff."

• Mizzou is a dramatically improved rebounding team. The Tigers have beaten all six opponents on the boards and it hasn't been close. Mizzou is averaging a 10-rebound edge. Alex Oriakhi leads the way with 8.8 per game.

"This year we have a lot of bodies and guys capable of rebounding," Bowers said. "I think we have some of the best rebounding guards. If a big man can't get a rebound, it's a little reassurance that our guards can get them."

• Ball-handling could be a long-term issue without Pressey on the floor, and even the All-America candidate has struggled with 13 turnovers in the last two games. Tigers coach Frank Haith hopes the situation will improve when Jabari Brown becomes eligible at the semester and if Michael Dixon returns to the team.

Freshman Negus Webster-Chan had some issues against Louisville but was much better against VCU. In need of some help, Haith turned to Bowers to help break VCU's press.

Haith has talked a lot about players having to accept roles and that is a work in progress. Although he used primarily seven players against VCU, nine have been given a chance at extended minutes and the rotation will evolve over time.

If the Tigers regain the services of both guards who haven't played, depth will not be an issue and they could become a different team.

"We've got a long season," Haith said, "so there will be a lot more court time for those guys to continue to establish themselves."

Columbia Tribune: Criswell Embraces Role With Tigers (11/29)
By Steve Walentik

Phil Pressey has had a simple message for Tony Criswell every time he's taken the floor for the Missouri basketball team this season.

Be a dog.

The Tigers point guard and team captain hasn't needed to elaborate. Criswell, a 6-foot-9 junior forward from Independence Community College in Kansas, knows exactly what Pressey means when he hears the phrase.

Pressey's words are a reminder for Criswell to play big on the boards, to make the effort to vacuum up every rebound, to fight for position on the defensive end and to be ready to hurl himself onto the floor in pursuit of a loose ball.

"My role is the energy guy," Criswell said, and he seems to be embracing it. "Coach just tells us to go out there and be tough, play our tails off, so that's what I try to do."

Saturday's 68-65 victory over Virginia Commonwealth in the third-place game of the Battle 4 Atlantis showed just how big a lift he can give Missouri when he's doing all those little things.

Criswell played 16 minutes in the game played in Paradise Island, Bahamas, but he still got his hands on seven rebounds. He was on the court in crunch time and stood his ground to take a charge from Rams point guard Darius Theus, giving the Tigers a much-needed defensive stop while clinging to a one-point lead with 57 seconds remaining. He also helped MU keep possession seconds later when he dived on the floor after the ball got knocked loose from Pressey.

"Those are effort plays," Coach Frank Haith said after the game. "Those are team-winning plays, and we saw that tonight."

Haith had to be particularly proud of the charge because he's been harping on his team's need to develop that skill and add it to its defensive repertoire after it became such an important tactic for members of last season's team, particularly guard-turned-forward Kim English, while protecting the rim with an undersized roster.

" 'Way to step up and be tough,' " Criswell recalled Haith telling him not long after the play.

That he was so willing to throw himself back on the deck again so soon earned him admiration from teammates.

"That just lets me know that he's willing to lay, not his life, but his body on the line for this game," Pressey said. "Knowing that just gives me a tremendous amount of respect for him."

The Tigers (5-1), who next play at 2 p.m. Saturday against Appalachian State, were confident in the potential of their two starters in the frontcourt — seniors Laurence Bowers and Alex Oriakhi — when the season began. Both had played significant minutes for successful teams and had been productive in their college careers, even if they'd never done so together and Bowers was trying to bounce back from a knee injury that cost him the entirety of last season. But they also needed to identify someone who could relieve the two seniors on a regular basis without a noticeable drop off in production.

Criswell, whose college career began at Alabama-Birmingham, was the logical choice, and he's beginning to deliver.

In addition to doing a lot of dirty work, he's starting to show signs he can contribute to the Tigers' offense.

He got off to a poor start, connecting on a mere 5 of 19 shots and totaling 15 points through the first four games. But he scored nine against Louisville — once even backing his man into the paint, turning over his left shoulder and draining a turnaround jumper.

"Coach says have a go-to move, and that's a move I work on daily," he said. "It wasn't a surprise when I made it."

That was one of four field goals he sank against the Cardinals, and he's now shooting 5 for 7 in the past two games.

He's been more productive on the glass throughout the season, debuting with 10 against Southern Illinois-Edwardsville and pulling down seven each in the past two games. His average of .32 rebounds per minute is the second-highest per-minute average on the team behind only leading rebounder Oriakhi.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch: Bowers Back, Better Than Ever (12/7)
By Vahe Gregorian

Last Dec. 6, an unheralded Mizzou basketball team coming off a dud season continued a rampage back to national prominence with an 81-71 win over Villanova at Madison Square Garden.

"They just have so many answers," Wildcats coach Jay Wright said after the game, "and they are so disciplined, intelligent and experienced."

Coaxed by Frank Haith, MU went 30-4 to earn a No. 2 seed in the NCAA Tournament only to be stunned 86-84 by 15th-seeded Norfolk State.

Despite the ending, MU's play typically was a tribute to the game, keyed by a crackling cohesiveness on both ends of the court that came from an understanding and embracing of roles.

"It's just once in a lifetime that you get to be blessed and on a team like this," MU forward Ricardo Ratliffe said after MU had 23 assists on 28 baskets against 'Nova.

The rarity has been underscored by Mizzou's start this season.

Yes, the Tigers are 7-1 and ranked 12th entering their game against Tennessee State (4-5) on Saturday at Mizzou Arena. And their obvious talent and depth suggests potential to contend for the Southeastern Conference title and make a postseason run.

But it all remains more potential than certainty as MU transitions from a team greater than the sum of its few parts to one sorting out how to maximize considerably more components on perhaps the most changed roster in the nation.

Last season, Mizzou employed a seven-man rotation built around a four-guard system conjured by necessity when forward Laurence Bowers was lost with a knee injury.

"It became, 'This is what it is. There's nowhere (else) to go,'" Haith said Monday. "We do have some options (this season). Which is a nice thing, too."

The optimal options still are being defined on a team with just one player, junior point guard Phil Pressey, back from last season in the wake of senior Michael Dixon's announced plan to transfer after being suspended all season.

While Mizzou's roster has plenty of players with collegiate experience, it lacks what last season's team had so much of: shared experience.

Freshly energized by Haith and his staff, that group dynamic gelled. The team's trust in each other was apparent from a constant sense of who was doing what and when all over the court.

Mizzou players hardly are devoid of that now, but they also obviously still are figuring each other out.

It's telling, for instance, that Pressey's assist to turnover ratio is 44-25, compared to 223-85 a year ago.

In some instances, the exotic passes that were a catalyst last season are clogging up MU because new targets aren't always ready for them.

"First of all, we just need to not do the crazy passes; we just need to keep it simple," Haith said, adding, "For right now, (the newcomers) are not expecting those passes and all they are is turnovers or just not good, solid plays."

So even if where MU goes starts with Pressey, voted preseason SEC player of the year by the media, he still is only one cog.

"I don't want him to feel like … he has to be this guy like Michael Jordan was when he first went to the (Chicago) Bulls," Haith said. "We've got good enough talent around him he can trust those guys."

While Haith wants Pressey to do more of what he has before, just better, he is asking virtually all the rest to do things they never have. And perhaps only one Tiger is fully in that flow as others are in flux: the 6-foot-8 Bowers, who is stronger, thicker, unimpeded by the knee and "answering the bell," Haith said.

Bowers, who scored a career-high 26 points on Tuesday, has added a dimension to his game: 3-point shooting – or, rather, 3-point making. He's 10 of 16 this season after hitting just 10 of 38 before.

But MU's key new players either are being rewired from previous stops or getting their first collegiate experience, as in the case of freshman guard Negus Webster-Chan, starting at off-guard as he's groomed to be the backup ballhandler.

Younger and apparently more readily malleable than those who have to be deprogrammed, Webster-Chan may be closest among newcomers to where Haith wants him. Literally.

He is not shooting well (14 of 46 from the field) and has more turnovers than assists (9-8), but Haith said he is "where he's supposed to be all the time" and is MU's best perimeter defender right now.

"I shouldn't be able to say that," Haith told the team.

That was a challenge, and to no one more than Keion Bell, a 6-4 senior guard who averaged 18.9 points his junior year at Pepperdine.

Bell is making real progress on defense, not to mention broadening other parts of his game.

"He was the guy who just scores buckets," said Haith, who says Bell needs to be a defender and rebounder first.

Haith has called upon others to evolve, with slower results.

Senior forward Alex Oriakhi, 6-9, started 96 games for Connecticut and his first eight at Mizzou, where he's averaging 10.3 points and 8.1 rebounds.

"What his role was at Connecticut was defend, rebound, screen, and that was ingrained after three years, and that's who he is," Haith said. "And now you've got to change it after three years and add on to (be an) offensive threat."

Oriakhi came to MU a sub-50-percent shooter (.493), and he's 27 of 59 this season and working to be what Haith wants.

Defensively, Haith said, Oriakhi needs to be "a wall, take charges if he can't block a shot. And that's a little different" for him.

On the other end, "We've got to get Alex moving a lot quicker; I think our offense is not as quick because he's not moving as quick and he's not as sure in his movement," Haith said. "But that will come, too."

Then there's forward Earnest Ross, the 6-5 junior from Auburn who is MU's third-leading scorer and rebounder and whose "energy" Haith likes.

As Oriakhi has to be pushed to be a scorer, Ross has had to be reeled in from a mentality that any time he touches the ball he has a good look.

"We had to work with that," Haith said, adding, "Earnest has gotten better. Earnest is actually now passing up shots."

Not that Haith doesn't want him shooting at all: He just needs him to recognize the differences between a shot, a good shot and a great shot.

Seeming to recognize and find a groove in his role off the bench is 6-9 forward Tony Criswell, formerly of Alabama-Birmingham and Independence Community College, who has had back-to-back double-figure games after averaging 4.3 points.

"We want Tony to be like Steve Moore (last season) and be the energy guy and bring those kinds of things to the court," Haith said.

MU also has gotten some of that type of energy from freshman forward Ryan Rosburg (Marquette High), who has played 22 minutes in the past two games.

Meanwhile, though, the puzzle has one more intriguing part soon to be absorbed: sophomore guard Jabari Brown, a transfer from Oregon considered among the top recruits in the country in 2011, is expected to be eligible as of MU's Dec. 17 game against South Carolina State "if all his paperwork is in," Haith said.

Haith called him "probably (the) best pure shooter on our team, and so that is a need of ours."

Brown said Monday he believes he is "twice the player" he had been before arriving at MU, but Haith urged patience about his instant impact.

"Our expectations have got to be tempered a little about what he can do from day one," Haith said.

As maybe they should be at the moment for a team still trying to become what it is, one with questions to be resolved and not yet, anyway, the "so many answers" the rare last edition had

Columbia Tribune: Earnest Ross: Truly Blessed (12/8)
By Brendan Meyer

He reminds himself every morning.

Everything his mother did while his father wasn't around. Her three jobs, the cities, states and countries he's lived in. The times when he had to take care of himself and his younger brother when nobody else could. He remembers the meals, the noodle cups, the Ramen, the fried bologna and cheese. He remembers the many apartments, the bad neighborhoods, the eviction, getting only what he needed and rarely what he wanted.

And he remembers the love.

From his mother, who skipped meals in order to feed him and his brother, and from his grandmother, who housed his family in Chicago and who was always his biggest fan.

He reminds himself of his unique athletic abilities, the ones that brought him to where he is today, and his strong faith in God, helping to instill the motto that everything happens for a reason.

Every morning he reminds himself, tweeting out the message, the same words printed on the sides of his torso. Truly Blessed. The tattoo is one of many that form the underlying framework of Earnest Ross' story.

He's a starting guard on the Missouri basketball team, a junior transfer from Auburn, a leader who has guided the No. 12 Tigers to an 8-1 record, and he wants you to know one thing: He is truly blessed.

"Only The Strong Survive"

She answers, thrilled to hear you've called again.

Her laugh is infectious, even over the phone, calling you darling and sweetie even though you've never met face-to-face. You feel a sense of comfort when hearing her voice, catching yourself smiling and not knowing why.

Her name is Toy Ross, and she is a retired disabled veteran, a mother of two sons and a 50-year-old who "doesn't look it."

She'll tell you anything you want to know. All you have to do is ask.

They divorced when Earnest Ross was 5.

She and her ex-husband were both in the military at the time, moving around early on in Ross' life. He was born in Guam, moved to Hawaii and then Japan before they split.

She left the military in 1996 after 15 years because she was working 12-hour shifts and could not spend enough quality time with her toddlers. So she moved her sons, Ross (5 years old) and Jamel (3 years old), to Washington state, living on their own.

"Believe me, everything wasn't peaches 'n' cream," she said.

His mother struggled to find work, sending her kids during the summers to live in Texas and Maryland with their father, who was still traveling from base to base in the military and made enough money to support the kids. It gave her a chance to get back on her feet.

But Ross hardly remembers those times.

If you ask him where he's from, he'll say Chicago. That's where his mother moved the kids, to her hometown, when he was 8 years old. They first moved in with her sister for a year and a half and then Toy Ross and her sons got their own apartment.

"When I think of Chicago, that's what I think about," Ross said. "My mom working all of these jobs, and us (Ross and his brother) just being by ourselves."

Toy Ross' days became longer than 12-hour shifts.

She worked as a waitress during the day, a cashier at night and retail on the weekends. They lived in a rough neighborhood, were evicted from their apartment and had to move in with her mother.

But no matter what happened, Toy Ross always provided, even if it was the bare minimum.

"They only got what they needed. Not what they wanted," she said. "There were times when we didn't have food, but I would always go without before I would let them go without. And I would try to keep them up to date with little clothes, and at Christmas time buy them little toys. It was a struggle."

It reminds him that even though it was tough, they all survived.

"Jamel"

He never complained about the snow.

It went up to his ankles as he walked his younger brother to and from school on the cold winter mornings in the south side of Chicago. It didn't matter that it was the complete opposite direction from his school or that he had to wake up an extra half hour early.

She called them her "latchkey kids."

Her sons had to take care of themselves when nobody else was around, walking back to the apartment, always carrying a latchkey.

"By the time your mom gets home, you're sleeping. By the time you wake up, she's gone again," Ross said. "At an early age, I learned that I had to be a leader. I had to be a role model. I had to show him (my brother) that we were not really struggling or that we were in a tough time."

Ross would force his brother out of bed at night and every morning to pray. He would reassure him that their current situation was only temporary, and in order for them to get out, they had to ask God. For his brother, Ross even did the thing that he hated most.

Cooking.

"It was something that, while my mom was at work, if I didn't do it, he was too young to do it," Ross said. "We were either not going to eat, or it was going to happen."

"And I was young, too, so him trying to ask for, like, fried chicken," Ross said, shaking his head, pausing to laugh. "I'm like, 'I'm 9. I can't do that.'"

They ate noodle cups, fried bologna sandwiches with cheese or Ramen with hot dogs.

"I hated that," Ross said. "It was some weird stuff, but we made it through."

The name, tattooed on his right forearm, is a reminder of the struggle they went through together. It's a reminder of how far each has come, Ross playing basketball at Missouri, his brother playing football at UNC-Charlotte, and a reminder of the time when their bond began.

"Seeing that sacrifice I had to do back then just makes me more thankful and appreciative for what I have now," Ross said.

"R.I.P. Ruth Miller"

The crowd is cheering, music is blaring, anticipation is growing, chills are beginning. A spotlight illuminates Ross, and he pauses to let her know. He kisses his hand and lightly touches his left forearm, the tattoo of Ruth Miller's name delicately wrapped around a rose.

He points his finger high above his head and briefly looks up at the rafters. His grandma was never able to make it to any of his basketball games.

"And now she's in a place where she can see them all," Ross said, smiling.

"Family first"

Ross' relationship with his mother couldn't be stronger. He talks to his brother every day. He's close with his aunts, uncles and cousins. Family means everything to him.

Then there's his relationship with his father.

"It's not bad, it's not good, it's not great," Ross said. "It's OK."

Following the divorce, Ross' father was rarely around. They lost touch. They hardly spoke.

"I was always the mother, and I was always the father," his mother said. "You know, it was times when Father's Day would roll around, and they would tell me, 'Happy Father's Day.'"

Ross was 12 years old, and his brother was 10 when they moved from Chicago to Washington, D.C. The brothers moved to live with their father when their mother was unable to support them. She went to court and made an agreement with her ex-husband that the children would be returned after a year and a half, enough time to get back on her feet. She lived and worked by herself in Chicago and then moved to North Carolina where her two sons would soon join her and attend high school.

It was a rough year and a half.

"He hated it," Toy Ross said, pausing long enough to think that the phone connection was lost. "He hated it the whole time. Pretty much point blank, he hated it."

But Ross doesn't hate his father. That year and a half was just different.

"Not seeing your dad for pretty much all of your life, to living with him, was a sudden change for me," Ross said. "Relationship-wise, it was kind of a different move. I didn't know how to relate to him. We didn't really know how to talk. Pretty much all of the stuff I'd been hearing about him kind of set my mind on the kind of person he was going to be."

His father has remarried twice and is still active in the military, currently in Afghanistan. He instilled strict values in Ross and his brother, teaching them their "Yes, sirs" and "Yes, ma'ams." He has seen Ross play basketball twice, his first and last game in high school. He now has two more kids.

Ross cares about his father, but he doesn't have the close bond with him that he shares with his mother. He states that when he has kids, he'll always be there for them and always be around.

He thinks his father might have learned from his previous mistakes.

"We could have been the experiment for them (his stepsiblings) to have a great life," Ross said. "I'm a spiritual person. I believe that everything happens for a reason. My dad was young when he had us, so he probably didn't really know. We were his first. So now he's doing what he could have done with us, with them. And I totally respect that. He's learning from his experiences, and everybody does that."

Ross and his father communicate by email. He gives him tips and advice on the basketball games he is able to watch online and told Ross that he plans to come to at least one game when he returns to the U.S. in January or February.

The tattoo, printed separately on his inner biceps, reminds him of what he values most. Everyone who was there in the past, the one person who wasn't and maybe a bond he will share in the future.

"Toy Miller"

She stands outside the locker room.

It's her first trip to the Bahamas, and she gets to spend it watching her son in the Battle 4 Atlantis tournament. Missouri just won its first game, 78-70 against Stanford.

She waits patiently with her sister, who also made the trip.

They both smile at each other.

"Oh sweetie, you had a good game," she says to her son, who had 10 points and 11 rebounds.

He grabs a box with a bow and hands the earrings to his mother. It's nobody's birthday, and it's not a holiday.

It's just a Thursday.

The words, her maiden name, are separately tattooed on his wrists, a constant reminder of the one person in his world he owes everything to. She worked the three jobs. She put the food on the table. She instilled his belief in God. She went to the basketball games. No matter what, she was always there.

She is the one who motivates him every day, the one who makes him tick on and off the court.

His mother stares at the box, confused.

"Why, Earnest?" she says.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch: Bowers Back, Better Than Ever (12/11)
By Vahe Gregorian

The first indication of how Mizzou forward Laurence Bowers was going to proceed after suffering a crushing, season-ending knee injury just over a year ago came within hours after the diagnosis when he honored a previous commitment to read to children at the Columbia Public Library.

Nothing under his control, that statement implied, was going to stop his appointed rounds.

Off or on the court, as it happens.

"I wanted to finish my senior season the right way," Bowers said Monday. "I didn't want to go out with people wondering what could have happened, how good of a player he could have been."

Nine games into his triumphant return, the only thing anybody might be wondering is how high the ceiling will be on his final season for 12th-ranked MU.

Bowers leads the Tigers in scoring (16.9 points a game) and in a new dimension to his game, 3-point percentage (.579, 11 of 19), is second on the team in rebounding (6.9 a game) and has emerged as the player most willing and able to hoist his teammates on his 6-foot-8 back.

"It's just going in knowing that my team needs me to be that much more of a bigger player than I've ever been," he said, "so I kind of put a little bit of pressure on myself and I just try to go out and perform."

It's all coming together with a counterintuitive blend of the calmness of maturity and the urgency of knowing his college career is finite.

"You can't take anything for granted, man. I'll tell anybody that," he said. "I love the game. I love basketball. I've been playing since I was 4."

Snapping his fingers for emphasis, he added, "And with the snap of a finger I was told, 'You're done for the season. Can't play.' "

Even as Bowers had to sit last season, he wrung all he could out of it.

He rehabilitated with zeal, which helps account for his bulkier physique (about 230 pounds) and improved 3-point shooting after three seasons in which he made just 10 of 38 outside the arc.

"I've improved my overall game," Bowers said. "I worked on extending my range a lot, just handling the ball a little bit more.

"I felt like my first three years here I was kind of an athletic garbage man, and this year I feel like I'm showing my versatility a little bit more."

That includes a maneuver that coach Frank Haith referred to as the "old man, up-and-under, step-back-off-one-foot, fade-away jump shot ... I didn't see that before."
Bowers laughed at the "old man" reference.
"I hear that all the time: 'Old man,' as in age, 'old man,' as in the way I play: It's getting kind of old — no pun intended," said Bowers, 10 points away from joining the MU 1,000-point club entering Mizzou's next game Monday against visiting South Carolina State. "I just try to find ways that I can put the ball in the hoop. If it's an old school fade-away, any kind of hook shot, if it works, why not use it?

"The old man jokes, I don't really care. I feel like I'm helping my team out doing it, so it's all good."

Between the heart he showed in rehabbing and his passionate presence on the sideline, Bowers even helped the team out last season as a visible, nearly tangible contributor to MU's 30-5 season.

"Believe it or not, and I say this sincerely, he helped us win games last year being on the sideline," Haith said.

So much so, in fact, that Haith wants to see more of that vocal presence now.

"He speaks to you guys (the media) very well, but I'd love for him to really, say, take ownership and be a little bit more forceful with his teammates," Haith said, adding, "I need that kind of jolt that he can give us."

Bowers smiled and said, "It's different when you're on the bench and you have all the energy in the world," but he acknowledged wanting to take that part of his game "up a notch," too.

"Leading by example," he said, "can only take you so far."

Time enough for him to work on that, though, now that he's past his biggest hurdles: the physical and mental aspects of rehab.

In one sense, that started with the excitement of returning to the court publicly for the first time at "Mizzou Madness" to tip off this season's practice.

"That was an emotional day: I tucked it in, but deep down inside, I was boo-hooing," he said. "It was ... a feeling I never felt before."

Still, being excited about playing and having faith in the knee are two separate things. But it wasn't long after that night that that came to Bowers, too, when he took a "big fall" in an exhibition game.

As he got up, Bowers said, "I got kind of nervous a little bit."

When he realized he was fine after a couple of those, he began almost to relish taking a fall.
"The more I fall and get back up, the more security I feel in my knee," he said, later adding, "I don't even think about my knee any more. ... It's just mental, I believe."

By Blair Kerkhoff

In the second half of Saturday's victory over Tennessee State, Missouri coach Frank Haith looked at his team on the floor and did a double take.

The smallest player in a Mizzou uniform was shooting guard Earnest Ross, who is 6-foot-6.

Joining Ross were 6-9 Alex Oriakhi, 6-8 Laurence Bowers, 6-11 Stefan Jankovic, and running the point was 6-7 Negus Webster-Chan.

"Can't get bigger than that," Haith said. "We can protect the rim a little bit."

No doubt, and the Tigers can also rebound, give the other team matchup problems and attempt high percentage shots with that kind of size.

But like the child who grows two pants sizes over the summer, Mizzou is experiencing some growing pains. They're learning how to play big.

"This year we actually have post players," point guard Phil Pressey said.

It's led to good things, like a spot in the top five in the nation in rebounding at 45.9 per game.

It also has meant the Tigers must play a different style of basketball than a season ago, when they won 30 games and entered the NCAA Tournament as a No. 2 seed.

Missouri, 8-1, is ranked 12th in The Associated Press poll, 11th by the coaches in the USA Today/ESPN poll. The Tigers were highly regarded entering the season on the strength of returning players Pressey and Bowers, who sat out last year rehabbing a torn ACL but averaged double figures in each of the previous seasons.

The Tigers added plenty of size to the roster, but they became even bigger when guard Michael Dixon Jr. was suspended and eventually left the program. Haith had announced in June that Dixon would start his senior year, essentially giving the Tigers a starting backcourt of two point guards who were excellent shooters.

But Dixon, who announced in late November that he was transferring after two sexual assault claims in which he was not charged became public, never suited up for the Tigers this season, and although the roster uncertainty was cleared, Mizzou was left with a team that had to function in a different way.

"We were planning on having me and Mike the backcourt," Pressey said. "That didn't happen, so we moved on."

Webster-Chan has started the past four games along with Bowers, Oriakhi, Ross and Pressey. Three others, 6-4 guard Keion Bell, 6-9 forward Tony Criswell and Jankovic, average double-figure minutes off the bench.

The contrast to last season is striking.

When Bowers went down, Haith elected to start four guards, often having 6-4 Kim English guard the opposing team's power forward. Ricardo Ratliffe was the team's lone big man starter, and the results, until the postseason, were spectacular.

The Tigers were unselfish and accurate perimeter shooters who fired at 50.4 percent accuracy from the field, ranking second nationally, and 39.8 percent from behind the arc. They ranked among the national leaders in assists, but they were No. 279 in rebounding.

This year's team is shooting 44 percent from the floor with only Bowers, the team's top scorer at 16.9 points, over 50 percent (58.2).

"You'd see all that space (inside)," Pressey said.

Now, he sees a forest, and Pressey is learning how to make it all work. In the game against Southeast Missouri State, he fired up 14 field-goal attempts in the first half. His career high for a game is 15.

"They (coaches) were trying to get me to be more aggressive," Pressey said. "I'm trying to figure it all out. Whether it's shooting or being in the attack more, it's going to take time to pick and choose my spots and figure it all out.

"I'm trying."

The Tigers are in store for yet another adjustment, and this one should help the offense. Jabari Brown, a 6-5 transfer from Oregon, sat out the first semester under NCAA rules, and pending completion of coursework is expected to suit up for the first time in Monday's home game against South Carolina State. Based on practice experience, teammates call Brown the team's best shooter.

After the Tennessee State game, Haith said Brown wouldn't start in his debut. Two days later, Haith backed off that idea.

"I'm not sure what we're going to do," Haith said. "I want it to be a competitive week. All bets are off. Let's go compete for playing time."

By Justin Yang

Laurence Bowers, a senior forward on the Missouri men's basketball team, has excelled in this season's first nine games.

He leads the team in scoring with 16.9 points per game. He is making a team-high 57.9 percent of his 3-pointers. He has the team's second most rebounds with 62, with forward Alex Oriakhi in the lead with 75.

His performance has helped place the No. 12-ranked, one-loss Tigers at No. 3 in the nation in rebounds.

He is only 10 points away from scoring 1,000 points at Missouri.

The statistics show the veteran captain's skills and ability, but coach Frank Haith thinks there's room for improvement. He wants to see Bowers improve in an area that can't be measured by numbers.

"I still want Laurence to be more vocal," Haith said. "He's a quiet kid. … I'd love for him to really take ownership and be a little bit more forceful with his teammates."

Last season, despite a season-ending knee injury, Bowers was an enthusiastic presence on the sideline. This season, Haith wants to see the same thing on the court.

"He was very vocal last year on the sideline," Haith said with a big smile. "I say this sincerely, he helped us win games last year being on the sideline. I need that passion. I need that kind of jolt he can give us."

Bowers said supporting his teammates while playing in a game is no easy task. He said doing it from the bench was much easier because he didn't need to play and he was filled with energy. Bowers said it takes a lot more energy to communicate with his teammates when he's on the court.

It is Bowers' job to point out to the guards where the opponent is attacking from and to get his teammates in position on defense.

"I feel like as a captain of the team, I definitely have to take it up a notch as far as being vocal," Bowers said. "And that's something I have to work on."

For Bowers, improving on being the leader on the court starts in practice. He says he tries his best to give encouragement and talk whenever possible. He will also give out constructive criticism when he has to.

"As a captain and veteran of the team, you can't have any excuses not to (communicate)," Bowers said. "In practice, I got to pick it up. Nothing to it but to do it."

Rivals.com: Family Helps Bowers Bounce Back (12/11)
By Gabe DeArmond

Long after the final buzzer sounds, they linger. About 20 rows up in section 117, right above the tunnel from which Missouri players emerge after leaving their locker room, they wait for their man. After the game is over, the interviews are done, the No. 21 jersey is stripped off, Laurence Bowers walks back on to the court.

He walks up some thirty stairs to greet the group. It's bigger than it used to be.

"I always had family here, but not in this large amount," Bowers said. "It's my last year. Senior year, they definitely want to seize the moment. They know how hard I worked to get back on the court and they're just here to support me every step of the way."

Hugs are exchanged. High-fives given. Smiles--always with Laurence Bowers there are smiles--abound.

The group has given itself a name. After every home game, Laurence Bowers reunites with "The BB's."

The first B is for Bowers. There is Nancy, Laurence's mother, who recently turned 51. There is Arlyn, Laurence's uncle, who played at Arkansas from 1988-91.

The BB's are tough to miss. At Mizzou's last game, a 68-38 win over Tennessee State, there were homemade signs, most noticeably a cutout of the letters "LBO," Laurence's nickname. There was the homemade t-shirt Nancy wore, a picture of Laurence dunking screen printed on the back with the phrase "Bow Down" beneath it. But more than ever before, the BB's are tough to miss due to the sheer number of them in Section 117.

"Laurence has got a lot of people who love him," Nancy Bowers said.

Chief among those people is Nancy.

Nancy organizes the trips from Memphis. Sometimes they take their own cars. Sometimes Nancy will rent a van. Aunts, uncles, cousins, his sister. Whoever wants to come, the BB's make the five-and-a-half hour drive from Memphis to Columbia to watch Laurence play.

"I've always supported my son," she said. "Even last year when he wasn't playing, I made sure I showed up at some of the games in support of the team. This year we all plan to make a lot of the games."

Nancy was there last year. She would cheer for Marcus Denmon and Kim English and Steve Moore. As those Tigers played their final season, winning 30 of 35 games, Nancy Bowers cheered. Her son sat on the bench in a suit.

Last year was supposed to be Laurence Bowers' senior season. He had played 99 games in his first three years. He had averaged 8.5 points, 4.7 rebounds and blocked 123 shots. He had been a part of 77 wins, three NCAA Tournaments, a Big XII tournament title and an Elite Eight. His first season under Frank Haith would be his last--along with English, Denmon and Moore as the remaining members of the Class of 2008--in a Tiger uniform.

"I was about to turn 50. I had had a birthday party on October third when he called me," Nancy Bowers remembers. "He said, 'Mama sit down.' I'm like okay, and that's when he told me about the ACL.

"I don't who cried the most, me or him."

"When he first called me he was sad, crying," Arlyn Bowers said. 'Me being an ex-ballplayer, I knew I had to step up, give him the confidence he needed. I told him everything happens for a reason."

As Bowers sat, Missouri won. As Bowers hit the weight room, his teammates hit shots. The Tigers went 30-and-5, winning the CBE Classic and capturing the Big XII Tournament Championship in their final season in the conference. Bowers became Missouri's biggest cheerleader.

"He was very vocal last year on the sideline," Haith said. "Believe it or not, and I say this sincerely, he helped us win games last year on the sideline."

When Phil Pressey's final desperation heave bounced away at the QWest Center in Omaha, Nebraska, Missouri's season came to a shocking end. Norfolk State, a 15 seed, moved on. Missouri, a two seed, went home. It was the end of the road for English, Denmon and Moore, as well as fellow seniors Ricardo Ratliffe and Matt Pressey.

It was not the end for Bowers. He had redshirted, vowing to return for his second senior season at Missouri.

"I've always told both of my kids to stay positive and strive for excellence," his mother said. "He's always said, 'Mama I'm coming back.' I said, 'I know you are baby.'"

"I wanted to finish my senior season the right way," Bowers says now. "I didn't want to go out with people wondering what could have happened, how good a player he could have been. I came back and said to myself I was going to try to lead like Marcus and Kimmie. So far, so good."

****

Not just good. Better.

"I feel like it. I've improved my overall game," Bowers said. "I worked on extending my range a lot, just handling the ball a little bit more. I felt like my first three years here I was kind of like an athletic garbage man. This year I feel like I'm showing my versatility a little bit more, helping Phil out breaking presses and just trying to do whatever coach needs me to do. I'm a senior, I'm a veteran and I know that coach and the team need my 100 percent effort every game."

Through nine games, Bowers is averaging 16.9 points and 6.9 rebounds, both career highs. He is shooting 58.2% from the floor and 57.9% from three-point range. He has made 11 three-pointers, more than he did in his first three seasons combined.

"He's a better, I don't want to say player, he's more gifted offensively than what I saw on tape. He's really expanded his game," Haith said. "He's definitely a more skilled offensive player than what I saw on tape."

Like everything else with Laurence Bowers, the transformation started with his family.

"The summer before he hurt his knee he was ready. He was doing the things we are seeing now," Arlyn Bowers said. "That long layoff, he kind of needed a refresher."
So Arlyn Bowers got in his car. He drove the five-and-a-half hours. He grabbed his nephew and he went to work.

"I came up a couple times and got in the gym with Laurence and trained him actually. Everyone wonders how he's all of a sudden shooting and scoring all these points," Arlyn said. "I took it upon myself to come up there and show him how he can get the ball and score in this offense. Showed him skill work, facing the basket, triple threat position, worked on his midrange game."

The result?

"He's actually a better player now that he hurt his knee."

For Arlyn, it was just the latest practice session with Laurence. Those have been going on for about 13 years now, since Laurence was nine.

"We're like father and son. His mom was the one that turned him on to basketball. She called me one day said you need to come see your nephew play. I said this kid can play," Arlyn said. "She asked me 'Can you take over for me?' Right then and there that was the day we started. He was a little bitty dude. We've been on the warpath ever since."

****

The knee injury, it seems, was a blessing in disguise for Bowers. Before that, when he was fully healthy, there was another injury. This one wasn't physical.

On March 23rd, 2011, some seven-and-a-half months before he would tear his ACL, Laurence Bowers fought back tears as he passed reporters camped outside of Mizzou Arena.

Bowers was born on April 19, 1990. His uncle had played two seasons at Arkansas by that point, where Mike Anderson was an assistant coach. Laurence Bowers had known Mike Anderson his entire life. And now, Anderson was leaving him.

"He said he was gonna miss him and he understood why he left and wished the best for him," Nancy Bowers remembers. "(Laurence) was gonna go ahead with the program."

Arlyn Bowers was already doing research.

"When they announced that coach Haith was coming, I was already on top of him watching how he played, watching his teams at Miami. I told Laurence, 'This coach's system is gonna fit him better than coach A's did," Arlyn said. "Laurence could never get inside the offense and show what he could do. It was just a lot of running and gunning.

"I told him, 'This guy, his system is gonna fit you and people are gonna see what you can do.'"

They're seeing it now.

"I think it comes with the coaching staff that he's got now because they recognize the talent that he has. They gave him the confidence to do it. Coach Anderson, I don't know if he ever recognized the talent. Laurence always has had that talent. They recognize the talent that he has and they use him.

"Laurence had never taken on a role like this ever since he's been playing basketball. He has never been the man."

The emphasis is on the last two words. This year, Laurence Bowers is THE MAN.

"I'm not a selfish guy. If I've made a few shots, I want to get my teammates involved so I'll swing it," he said. "Most of my shots, it's just great ball movement. I'm just the beneficiary.

"It's just going in knowing that my team needs me to be that much more of a big player than I've ever been. I kind of put more pressure on myself."

He doesn't have a courtside seat for it, but even Bowers' former coach is taking notice. Arlyn Bowers still talks to Mike Anderson on a regular basis.

"Coach A knew the type of uncle I was and how I push and drive Laurence," Arlyn said. "He told Laurence that he was going to be all-conference before he left. He's not surprised."

Anderson will have two chances to see Bowers in person this season. With Missouri's move to the Southeastern Conference, the Tigers and Razorbacks will play two league games this year.

"I ain't gonna miss that game for the world," Arlyn Bowers says with a laugh. "I could be laid up in the hospital and I wouldn't miss that game."

****

Not that the BB's will miss many games anywhere. They're going to Oxford for the Ole Miss game and Starkville when the Tigers play Mississippi State. Laurence's grandmother cannot usually make the trip to Columbia, but she will be in Nashville when the Tigers face Vanderbilt. Wherever Laurence plays, the family will follow.

"Coach always tells me, you only got 13 games, you only got 12 games. You shouldn't take any game for granted so that's my approach to it," Laurence said. "I've been here for a long time and sitting out last year, it makes you so much hungrier. It makes you appreciate the game that much more. I go out and give it my all every time out."

"His determination just wows me. He has that go get 'em attitude of 'I'm gonna do this,'" Nancy Bowers said. "I just constantly encourage him."

Bowers and his family have learned in the last year that nothing is a given. The next game is not guaranteed. He knows he has this season. Beyond that, they all hope there is more basketball to come.

"The NBA always been a dream of his. He done got through the hard part. He's graduated, he's gonna have his Master's before he leaves," Arlyn said. "His dream is about to come true."

If he makes it on the next level, Nancy Bowers says "half the city of Memphis will probably be there" to watch him play.

But that is all in the future. For now, Laurence Bowers has business to take care of at Mizzou. In Section 117, they'll be watching.

"Oh man, I be up there almost in tears. All the hard work I put in in the gym with him, all the time, the effort, I'm actually seeing it," Arlyn Bowers said. "I'm seeing the true Laurence Bowers. I just be up there almost in tears."
There are no tears from mom. Not yet, anyway. Nancy Bowers is busy organizing road trips. While his uncle goes on and on about Laurence Bowers, his mother needs far fewer words:

"I'm just very, very proud of my son."

Columbia Missourian: Tibaldi An Important Cog For Mizzou (12/19)
By Mitchell Ferman

Video editing, opponent scouting, meetings with coaches, paper work, coordinating travel and team managers are just some of the things on Tibaldi's list.

The Missouri men's basketball program needs Tibaldi, its video coordinator, to juggle an assortment of jobs.

During the offseason, Tibaldi will be an air traffic controller of sorts for the assistant coaches while they're traveling to meet or watch recruits. He stays sharp on the latest recruiting articles because he might get a call from one of the Missouri coaches heading to a high school asking for a coach's number or a recruit's latest stats.

"It's good to come in early and get things checked off," Tibaldi said. "Because from about nine to three, I'll be getting calls from the assistants on the road, and next thing I know, the day's winding down."

After he hangs up, head coach Frank Haith will sometimes come into Tibaldi's office asking him to diagram some plays he can teach at the next practice. The dry-erase board in Tibaldi's office is always covered with drawn-up plays. Before the calls come in, Tibaldi might work on a highlight tape of the previous season to show potential recruits. He posts highlight tapes to the Missouri basketball YouTube channel, which has more than 200 subscribers.

During the season, players sometimes come in early to get the previous game on their iPads. Tibaldi has all the games stored on his computer.

Players will also come in to break down film of previous games, focusing on things they've been struggling with. For example, Negus Webster-Chan was struggling with his shooting early in the season. Tibaldi was aware that Webster-Chan was coming later that afternoon, so he opened his Macbook and used software to edit all of the minutes into one file. He then passed that along to an assistant coach, who then watched the film with Webster-Chan and explained how to improve.

The night before games is especially intense for Tibaldi and the rest of the basketball staff.

"When it comes down to getting in the trenches and preparing for an opponent, we'll stay in the office until two in the morning," associate head coach, Tim Fuller, said. "He (Tibaldi) will stay until four or five getting done what he needs to get done, and then he'll be back at eight ready to work."

Once the game starts, Tibaldi sits among the assistant coaches on the bench. He's the only one with blond hair. Tibaldi doesn't lack intensity throughout games: Spit flying from his mouth, arms flailing, clipboard tightly grasped.

While the game is being played, the live feed is being transmitted into his office and onto his computer. Once the game is finished, he distributes the game tape to the players and staff.

At some point after the game, Tibaldi goes home, usually forgetting about the checklist he made that morning.

STL Post-Dispatch: Mizzou's Pressey Is Irreplaceable (12/23)
By Bryan Burwell

By the end of this crazy, loud and hyped-up Saturday evening, Phil Pressey was sitting in a quiet corner of the near-empty Mizzou locker room at Scottrade Center slowly stuffing his belongings into a duffel bag.

He'd just played all but 58 seconds of the No. 12 Tigers' 82-73 victory over 10th-ranked Illinois, but he hardly looked like he'd played a minute.

"Am I tired?" the junior point guard asked with a broad smile on his face. "Nah, are you kidding me? That's what I'm here for. That's why we run all those sprints in the summer. That's why you work so hard on conditioning. Shoot, I fell like I can play 40 minutes a night if I need to. Maybe 45, if I have to."

He just might have to.

The smallest man on the court is the biggest man in the game every night for Mizzou. Every night, he is a little 5-foot-11 jitterbug scooting among so many long-limbed giants. Every night, he is the most irreplaceable Tiger on the floor. Every night, Mizzou coach Frank Haith understands that there just isn't enough time or responsibility that he can place in Pressey's highly influential hands.

So, how big a surprise was it on a night when Pressey shot an abysmal three-for-19 from the floor (including an unsightly 0-for-4 from beyond the 3-point arc) that he still was the most important player in a Missouri uniform?

Whatever the Tigers accomplish this season and however higher they climb in the national polls, it will all depend on Pressey's play.

He doesn't have to shoot well for Mizzou to win, but he has to play well, he has to play smart, he has to continue to find ways to get the ball in his teammates hands, run this offense, be a defensive pest and when everything else is falling apart, be a flash of breathless energy. So, go ahead and look at the box score and scratch your head a bit and wonder how a guy who misses his first 15 shots from the floor and made only one of his first 17 can be the most important player in the game.

But by the end of the sold-out Braggin' Rights showdown, there was no doubt how critical Pressey was to this game's outcome. He scored eight of Mizzou's last 12 points, dished out a game-high 11 assists, grabbed seven rebounds and played some critical lock-down defense on Illinois high-scoring guard Brandon Paul.

After going stone cold all night long, he suddenly found his shooting touch in the game's final four minutes, with a tear-drop flip in the lane for his first basket, drew a foul in traffic and hit two free throws, burst down the baseline and dished a perfect pass in the lane for a Laurence Bowers dunk, then followed that with a reverse layup under a tangle of Illinois defenders and finished things off with a fast-break layup at the buzzer.

He silenced the Illinois side of Scottrade Center and caused the Mizzou side of the place to dance in the aisles.

The Tigers are 10-1 and probably will find themselves in the Top 10 when the next rankings come out.

Against Illinois, Haith continued his December-long experiment with his lineups (he started Keion Bell and Jabari Brown on Saturday along with Bowers, Pressey and Alex Oriakhi for the fourth different starting lineup of the season) and mixed and matched different combinations as game situations warranted it. But Haith knew better than to spend too much time without Pressey in the game for very long. In fact, the only time he did take his point guard out was a brief little 58-second run in the middle of the first half that produced four of the ugliest, awkward offensive trips up the floor all night.

"He's a valuable guy," said Haith. "Obviously he was at a level where I couldn't afford to take him out."

And while it's a tribute to Pressey's value to Haith – and a wonderful highlight reel of why he is considered one of the best point guards in the land – it also is a glaring symbol of the Tigers' most apparent deficiency.

There is no Plan B right now at point guard.

If Pressey isn't on the floor, it's not exactly chaos, but it is very, very, very unsettling to see what the next best option is.

In fact, every once in a while, it's a little unsettling when he is on the floor, too. After Saturday's game, Pressey was telling reporters how his dad – Paul Pressey, a former NBA veteran and current assistant coach – once gave him some valuable advice on what to do even when his shot isn't falling.

"Just stay in attack mode," Pressey said, sporting a devilish smile. "My dad always told me that if you can't pass it just throw it up and maybe a (big man) will get a rebound, so ..."
At that point, Haith looked at Pressey and started laughing.

STL Post-Dispatch: Brown In Midseason Form For Mizzou (1/3)
By Stu Durando

The temptation to make game days a leisurely fan experience during the season's first month was never a problem for Jabari Brown. Games for his Mizzou teammates meant the transfer from Oregon faced a workout regimen that made him feel like he'd played his share of minutes. Only then could he take a seat at the end of the bench as a spectator for the first 10 games.

"They do a real good job making sure we're still working hard when we're not playing," he said. "I had workouts (on game days) to simulate game type stuff since I wouldn't be out there and then go lifting. I felt it prepared me to jump right in and prepared me to be ready."

Having transferred at the semester last season after playing only two games at Oregon, Brown wasn't eligible to play for the Tigers until Dec. 17. But Mizzou needed the 6-foot-5 sophomore to be ready.

With Michael Dixon departed and the Tigers in dire need of a perimeter shooter, Brown knew extensive playing time would come quickly. After getting his feet wet against South Carolina State, he was expected to be in midseason form.

Brown played 35 minutes in the win over Illinois and 39 in an overtime loss at UCLA and has responded with productive outings.

Known as a shooter and scorer, the Oakland, Calif., native has scored 32 points in the past two games, making seven of 15 3-pointers. But coach Frank Haith believes he can do much more.

Brown also grabbed seven rebounds in the past two games. He has shown that he's adept at getting to the basket and drawing fouls. And then there are intangibles.

"He's grown, he's matured," Haith said before Brown's first game as a Tiger. "The other thing Jabari will bring to this team is basketball IQ. And I've seen him be more of a good teammate in terms of being more vocal. He was a reserved kid when he got here, real quiet. We've seen him become more outgoing."

The adjustment to a new team isn't a new thing for Brown, who has played on five school teams in the past five seasons. And that doesn't include AAU competition.

He won a state championship with Salesian High (Calif.) as a sophomore before transferring to Findlay Prep in Las Vegas. That experiment lasted half a season, and Brown moved back to the Bay Area to attend Oakland High.

It was then on to Oregon and a short-lived stay with the Ducks before choosing Mizzou, where he will have three years of eligibility.

Haith's comments about Brown echoed those of Oakland High coach Orlando Watkins, when he gained the guard's services in January 2010.

"He adds scoring, obviously, a high basketball IQ, rebounding and defensive pressure," Watkins said at the time. "Everything a coach could ask for he brings to the table."

After his final high school game in March 2011, Brown played in two official games in the next 20 months.

"I feel pretty comfortable," he said by phone during a brief visit in Oakland this week. "I don't feel like it's that much of an adjustment because I know what to expect from Coach. Games are a little different, but I'm getting more comfortable as I play more games."

Besides practicing with the Tigers during his redshirt year, Brown did what he could to keep his much-discussed shot in prime form. Whenever possible, he stayed after practice to make 200 shots.

As it became clear that Mizzou didn't have a consistent 3-point threat, the idea of injecting Brown into the rotation became more attractive. In the six games that preceded his arrival, the Tigers made 32 of 104 3-pointers (30.8 percent).

The theory was that a good perimeter shooter would help create more opportunities offensively for other players. The Tigers didn't shoot 50 percent in any of their 10 games without Brown. They hit 57 percent against South Carolina State and 48 percent against UCLA and are at 48 percent overall in his three games.

"I think it's helped probably," he said. "I've noticed a couple of times guys not helping as much off of me. I've shot pretty well on 3's, and I know we hit a lot of 3's (12) in the last game. Overall we're shooting better, trying to space the floor for Phil (Pressey), Alex (Oriakhi) and everybody else."

His arrival has forced Haith to alter the division of playing time. Freshman Negus Webster-Chan took a hit with six minutes against Illinois, and Oriakhi's minutes diminished against UCLA.

If Brown produces long-term results that mirror his early production, his 30-plus minutes a game will be a worthy investment.

Rivals.com: Bell Toils, Grows Into Role For Missouri (1/2)
By Vahe Gregorian

When UCLA coach Ben Howland last had seen Keion Bell coming his team's way in November 2010, he was wary because the Pepperdine guard had scored 22 points as a sophomore a year before in a 71-52 loss against the Bruins.

Howland's scouting report: "They like to give him the ball and let him come at you one-on-one, 100 miles per hour," he told the Los Angeles Times.

Anticipation notwithstanding, Bell still uncorked 24 points – albeit blemished by eight turnovers – in UCLA's 79-69 victory.

"We couldn't stop him," Howland said last week as the Bruins prepared for Bell and his team, now Mizzou.

And at least through the first half of a classic between the Tigers and Bruins that was punctuated by a miserable finish for MU in a 97-94 overtime loss, Bell echoed his past against the Bruins.

Hitting six of his seven shots, he had 13 of MU's first 29 points — and 11 in a row — to help keep the Tigers afloat and work to a 47-47 halftime tie after UCLA threatened to peel away with multiple double-digit leads.

But the thrill of playing before numerous friends and family members had faded by game's end for the Los Angeles native.

Mizzou bungled a nine-point lead with just over 4 minutes left in regulation to fall to 10-2 and dip from seventh to 12th in The Associated Press poll entering its final nonconference game Saturday against Bucknell at Mizzou Arena.

"Now it's just a nasty feeling, especially since I feel like we had the game won," Bell, a senior, said in a phone interview Monday from California. "We kind of let one slip away. It's a nasty feeling I've had. … Still do."

The collapse featured MU making just two of its final 16 field-goal attempts, including one of nine in overtime – and not including Bell's desperation catch, spin and hurl off a Jabari Brown miss at the end of regulation that appeared in time to count but hit the back of the rim.

Had it fallen, Mizzou's discombobulation down the stretch and the UCLA hack-a-Tiger spree capped by the unsavory grab of Phil Pressey would be footnotes instead of lingering themes.

"We have to stick to our game plan and stick to our character," Bell said. "As the game started to dwindle down, we started doing a lot of things that were out of our character and just weren't characteristic of how we play basketball. …

Bell, who finished with 15 points, had his own moment in the uncharacteristic realm when he missed a wide-open layup with the score tied 91-91 with just over 2 minutes left in overtime.

While he wishes he'd made it, Bell said he's hardly haunted by the play, noting that MU regained the lead moments later and adding, "It wasn't like one play decided the whole game."

Looking forward, he added, "We've got a lot of players who have been in college for three, four years, so for us to execute that way down the stretch is just not acceptable and something we've got to get better at."

Veteran as Mizzou might be, the Tigers still remain a team with just one player back from a year ago (Pressey) and two (Pressey and Laurence Bowers) who ever had put on an MU uniform before.

The UCLA game, in fact, was just the third of the season with the roster completed by the addition of Brown, the Oregon transfer who became eligible after the first semester.

As for Bell himself, he's showing signs of finding comfort in Columbia and the new on-court persona coach Frank Haith is preaching after Bell sat out last year because of transfer rules.

"I kind of view it as home away from home for the most part; I've been there for about a year and a half now," Bell said, laughing and adding, "If I'm not adjusted by now, I don't have much more time to get adjusted."

It helped his adjustment some to be there all last season. He was part of a valuable practice squad of transfers and even learned the terrain enough to write his rap song, "Welcome To The Zou."

The song, accessible by Google search, perhaps is highlighted by the line, "Coach Haith is the professor, and he be teaching chemistry."

Now the professor's lessons have a more practical tone as well.

Haith has tried to sculpt the athletic 6-foot-4 guard known for his theatrical dunks to become defensive-minded, a task Bell says he never really was asked to consider as he scored 1,365 points at Pepperdine.

While Bell still has room to improve defensively, Haith has been pleased with how Bell has embraced the notion.

Possibly as a result, Bell now seems more comfortable offensively, too, as he finds his place in a system that isn't built around him.

After making just 10 of his 27 field-goal attempts in MU's first five games, he's 30 of 57 in the last seven – considerably above his career 42.3 percent average – and has resumed starting in the last three games.

Bell also has improved at the free throw line, where he's hit 27 of 30 (90 percent) after coming to MU with a career 74.8 percent average.

Add it all up, and he is a different player from what Howland knew him to be but emerging as better-rounded.

And even if he's nursing the "nasty" feeling of the UCLA loss, he's a vital element in Mizzou's hopes to make the season special and make UCLA a springboard instead of a signature.

Columbia Tribune: Bell Grows Into True Team Player (1/2)
By Steve Walentik

They've all had difficult transitions. But none of the Missouri basketball team's newcomers has had to adjust his game more than senior guard Keion Bell after transferring from Pepperdine for his final college season.

"If only you knew his background — really knew it — in terms of how he played at Pepperdine," Coach Frank Haith said. "He's really had to change the whole mind-set."

With the Waves, Bell had the ball in his hands almost all the time, and he had the freedom to search for his shot at any moment. Often his coaches demanded it because there was a direct correlation between his ability to pile up points and his team's chances to win. Opposing teams knew that and made slowing Bell down a top priority.

None of that's been true this season with the Tigers. Laurence Bowers and Phil Pressey are the focus of opposing scouting reports, and Pressey is the one steering the attack. It's up to everyone else to figure out how to fit in around him.

"That's the biggest thing, is playing off the ball," said Bell, whose team plays host to Bucknell at 3 p.m. Saturday. "Naturally, I'm a scorer. So playing off the ball and finding ways within the offense to score without the ball, it can be difficult."

He's made significant progress over the past month after occasionally playing out of control and forcing shots in the first five games.

Since tallying only four points in a loss to Louisville in late November, Bell has gone for 12 or more five times in seven games. He is averaging 9.2 points for the season — a number that could be even higher if foul trouble hadn't limited him to 11 minutes and one point against Illinois.

He's emerged as one of the team's most dependable players after an enigmatic start to the season.

Bell's transformation started with a demotion to the bench after the loss to the Cardinals. Haith said that helped take some pressure off him, but he's continued to produce since returning to the starting lineup.
"I was just playing at a higher comfort level than I was in the previous five games," Bell said. "Coming off the bench didn't really change the way I played."

Though marred somewhat by a botched layup and missed tip-in in overtime, Bell's performance Friday in a 97-94 overtime loss at UCLA provided the clearest evidence of how well he's adapting. He scored a season-high 17 points and had six rebounds while making 8 of 13 shots.

Bell, who averaged more than 18 points in his final two seasons at Pepperdine, had produced bigger numbers against the Bruins at Pauley Pavilion. The Los Angeles native poured in 22 points in the historic arena as a sophomore in 2009, and a year later, he went for 24.

But he did a lot of his damage in Friday night's game without the Tigers making any extra effort to get him the ball.
Consider the stretch in the first half when Bell scored 11 straight Missouri points, helping the Tigers remain within striking distance in the middle of the period. Two of his baskets were tip-ins while UCLA players had their eyes trained on Bowers and failed to block him out. Another time, he got a free on a fast break and converted a layup.

Those are the kind of plays Haith likes to see from Bell because they are proof that he's playing aggressively and making use of the athleticism that is Bell's biggest strength.

Haith doesn't believe Bell's athletic ability should only show up on offense. At 6-foot-4, with good quickness and exceptional leaping ability, Bell also has the traits that make for a gifted perimeter defender.

The coach spent the early part of the season calling on Bell to become a defensive stopper.

"No one's ever asked him to do that before, and he'll tell you that," Haith said. "I think he's done a really good job of understanding that's what we need him to do for us to be good."

Bell isn't a stopper. He had to give way to Pressey when the Tigers tried to lock down Illini guard Brandon Paul in the second half of their Braggin' Rights victory, and he struggled with everybody else on the defensive end against UCLA. But he does rank second on the team with 15 steals.

"I still haven't reached that potential yet," Bell said, "but I believe that I've made steps in the right direction."

Columbia Tribune: Loss Hurts, But Will Benefit Tigers (12/30)
By Steve Walentik

Chances are that 2½ months from now nobody will be asking Frank Haith and his No. 7 Missouri basketball team for an explanation of Friday night's loss at UCLA.
By the time the NCAA Tournament selection committee is assigning seeds in the 68-team championship field in March, the 97-94 overtime defeat at Pauley Pavilion will be listed under the acceptable losses on the Tigers' résumé along with their other defeat, against then-No. 2 Louisville in the Battle 4 Atlantis.

The Bruins seem finally to be justifying the faith that voters had in their highly touted freshman class before the season, when they picked Coach Ben Howland's team 11th in The Associated Press' preseason poll.

UCLA is entering Pac-12 Conference play on a five-game winning streak after claiming its first nonconference victory over a top-10 team since 2007 against Michigan State and could be a real threat to No. 3 Arizona in the league race.

"They got off to a slow start, but we definitely saw how great of a team they are tonight," MU senior forward Laurence Bowers said.

Star rookie Shabazz Muhammad, the nation's top-ranked recruit last season, appears destined to be chosen with one of the first three picks in June's NBA draft, but not before he treats Bruins fans to a few more dominating performances like his 27-point outing against the Tigers — which was his fourth straight game with more than 20 points.

With fellow phenoms Jordan Adams and Kyle Anderson also shining on the wings, soft-shooting forwards Travis and David Wear creating matchup problems along the frontline and steady senior point guard Larry Drew II at the controls, UCLA has the ingredients to be one of the country's best offensive teams the rest of the way.

Of course, none of that made the loss any less dispiriting as the Tigers scattered after the game for a delayed holiday break — with most of the traveling party taking an overnight flight back to Missouri through

Dallas. Everyone knew how close they were to securing another signature nonconference victory on the heels of their Braggin' Rights win over then-No. 10 Illinois six days earlier in St. Louis.

Missouri led 86-77 as the clock ticked toward the final four minutes of regulation with UCLA in the midst of a more than 4-minute scoring drought, but the Tigers couldn't hold on.

"We didn't execute very well," said Haith, whose team let the Bruins go on a 9-0 run to draw even and only scored two points in the final 5½ minutes. "We made some really gambling plays, and that really cost us. We need to learn how to finish a game out in the last three minutes."

The Tigers had made defense their hallmark during a 10-1 start but had too many breakdowns against the Bruins, who made 37 of 64 shots (57.8 percent) after starting 3 for 15 from the field.

UCLA's 50.6 percent shooting overall was a season high for a Missouri opponent, and the 88 points the Bruins scored in regulation were the most the Tigers had surrendered since an 89-88 victory at Baylor last January.
Missouri also forced a season-low six turnovers while giving the ball away 17 times.

Haith also would have liked the Tigers to be a little more aggressive attacking the basket and getting to the foul line. Even allowing for the benefit of the doubt often given the home team, it was hard to imagine that Missouri had drawn just two fouls with 11.8 seconds remaining in the second half. UCLA was able to give up four more without penalty, bleeding precious seconds off the clock, and limiting Missouri's options for the final possession of regulation.

Still, there were plenty of positives the Tigers can try to build on when they reconvene in Columbia later this week and begin preparing for their final nonconference game against Bucknell on Saturday afternoon. The Southeastern Conference opener comes three days later against Alabama.

The biggest plus has to be the way Missouri's many newcomers seem to be meshing with star point guard Phil Pressey, who set a school record with 19 assists against the Bruins and is averaging 15 assists in the past two games.

"My teammates are growing to figure out how I play," Pressey said. "I have a unique type of game, and it's going to take time for my teammates to learn how to cut and find the open spots, and I really feel like we're growing together."

The connection between Bowers and Pressey has never been in question. He got loose for 17 points, including a dunk after Pressey passed out of a triple-team that gave the Tigers a two-point lead entering the final minute of regulation.

But Earnest Ross and Jabari Brown, who combined for 30 points and seven of Missouri's season-high 12 3-pointers, also put themselves in positions for Pressey to find them for open scoring chances. Brown even had a clean look at a 3-pointer off a kickout pass from Pressey with 1:33 remaining in overtime and the Tigers holding a one-point lead, but it missed the mark.

The more Pressey trusts his teammates to be in the right spots, the less he'll feel the need to force his own shots. He finished with a game-high 19 points and displayed far greater efficiency than in a 3-for-19 shooting performance against Illinois. But he still missed 14 of his 22 field-goal attempts and is only shooting 34.7 percent this season.

STL Post-Dispatch: Mizzou's Pressey Must Lead (1/5)
By Joe Strauss

There is no great player in college basketball who shoulders the fortune of his potentially great team more than Phil Pressey.

Any witness to Missouri's 66-64 Saturday afternoon escape against Patriot League entry Bucknell knows this after watching Pressey alternately dazzle, frustrate, orchestrate, improvise and occasionally appear to play without a compass.
Though Pressey's coach considers his 11-2 team the sum of its parts, Pressey resembles the hub and his teammates the spokes. Through Frank Haith's point guard all good — and some bad — must pass or shoot.

"Coach Haith is going to live and die with me," Pressey flatly says. "I know deep down inside when we get playing the way we're supposed to, we're going to be tough to beat."

In a dizzying span of 67 seconds midway through the first half the still-scoreless Pressey turned three straight possessions into baskets that tied the game or gave his team the lead. They also his only points of a baffling opening 20 minutes.

With his 12th-ranked team threatened with an upset, Pressey returned in the second half to score 19 of his career-most 26 points and provide five assists.

With less than three minutes remaining Pressey drilled a 3 on his third shot within the same possession.

The make was worth a lead the Tigers never relinquished.

The game's final assist occurred with 35 seconds remaining when Pressey emerged from a back-court scrum to zip a 40-foot pass to Keion Bell, who finished with a dunk for a 64-61 lead.

To watch Pressey is to contemplate what will happen next.

He can miss his first 16 shots against Illinois before converting his last three to put a dagger in the game.

He can push NBA tempo for a school-record 19 assists.

Pressey can do everything except bore.

"Phil just needs to be Phil," Haith says. "We don't want Phil to feel he has to carry the weight of the world on his shoulders, OK?"

Well, Atlas shrugs.

Pressey leads Missouri in shots attempted, assists and minutes played. Within Saturday's performance he tied Larry Drew for third on the school's career assist list (433). Senior forward Laurence Bowers put it succinctly moments after the wrenching win: "He's my captain."

With Pressey more often at his best the Tigers are a threat to challenge for the Southeastern Conference title and go deep in the NCAA Tournament. All involved know it can go the other way as well given a roster thin on ball-handlers and backcourt experience.

"I'm comfortable with that," Pressey says. "From day one (Haith) has put his trust in me. If he yells at me I know it's for the good. At the same time I know he's going to pat me on my back. I'm always looking to learn from him."

The game couldn't have been more different than the Tigers' overtime track meet at UCLA, in which the teams conspired for 159 shots, 191 points, 42 assists and almost too much athleticism for 94 feet to handle. Bucknell head coach Dave Paulsen readily admitted his focus was on stopping Pressey the playmaker at the risk of turning him loose as a scorer.

The Bison were so leery of Pressey forcing tempo that they made little attempt at offensive rebounding in the first half. Rather than pressure Missouri's set offense, Paulsen had his defense play off the Tigers' point guard, daring him to hoist away.

"I just get a feel for the game. I know how teams are playing me," Pressey says. "I know I've got to prove to them that I can hit a (3) or a mid-range jumper. If I can hit that shot it's going to open things up for my teammates. They're going to come open and the game is to flow better than if I'm trying to force the ball to them."

Pressey is gifted enough to be chosen as the Southeastern Conferece preseason player of the year before the conference ever saw him in the flesh. However, he apparently has yet to command patience from all black-and-gold faithful.

Within the Tigers' first five possessions Saturday, Pressey missed a 27-foot 3, a second from closer range and committed a turnover. And with 16:44 left in the half Mizzou Arena answered what it sounds like to hear 13,856 groan.

Pressey says he is oblivious to it.

"I know what we're working on. I know what our coaching staff wants," he says.

For 20 minutes Saturday it was Paulsen who got what he wanted: the same player who doled out 19 assists eight days earlier in Westwood impossibly managed none while the visitors took a 28-24 halftime lead.

Pressey served as his team's distributor last year. He fed scorers Kim English, Ricardo Ratliffe or his older brother, Matt, while averaging 7.5 shots per game. He managed almost as many assists (223) as shots attempted (269).

This year Pressey might shoot first and ask questions later. In the Tigers' last three games he has attempted 19, 22 and 22 shots in 122 minutes, a contrast to his average 11 shots during the first seven games, which covered 237 minutes.

Pressey never attempted more than 15 shots in his first 54 collegiate games. He has taken 18 or more shots in four of his last six. Pressey is shooting 33 percent from the field the last three games – 36.6 percent for the season – but insists the depressed numbers are a function of adjusting to an expanded role that necessitates a different mindset.

"All my life I've been a pass-first point guard," Pressey says. "I'm 'pass, pass.' And now the coaching staff is telling me I need to shoot a little bit more. I'm trying to balance that. I'm trying to figure that out. I'm going to take some bad shots because I'm not used to taking them. I work on them in practice but it's an entirely different shot in the game. I'm going to live with the misses because I know in the long run it's what's best for the team."

Haith says he knows where Pressey is going, what he's thinking, what he intends.

There is no visible reaction when Pressey, perhaps seeking a foul, makes a second-half drive to the basket, transfers the ball from one hand to the other, twists 180 degrees and attempts an overhead lay-in that misses.

"He's a terrific player,'' Haith said. "I think he's so excited about getting better and learning. You love a kid like that. He has that kind of attitude. But I don't think 'surprised' is the word. When you have those special players – and he is one of those guys – they can do a lot of things on the basketball court other than score."

Pressey's presence Saturday forced an opponent to fit its game plan solely to his dimensions. Thirteen games behind them, the Tigers enter conference play Tuesday with a multi-faceted weapon, its power unquestioned, its direction still tightening.

Columbia Missourian: Criswell Gritty Play Helps Tigers (1/15)
By Justin Yang

The small black cast Missouri forward Tony Criswell wears on his left hand during basketball games does not bother him.

The splint that Criswell has to wear off the court does bother him — it does not allow him to break his falls.

He fell out of his bed without a way to brace his impact recently. The worst was the time he slipped on the ice and hit his head on his car.

"Too funny," Criswell said laughing over the phone.

At Ole Miss on Jan. 12, the Tigers struggled with their readjusted lineup and lost 64-49, with Criswell fouling out after contributing six points and two rebounds. But against Georgia on Wednesday night, Criswell earned coach Frank Haith's praise after a 10-point, six-rebound performance in a 79-62 victory.

"Tony has an ability to score," Haith said Thursday afternoon in a teleconference. "But he's willing to do the dirty work."
Criswell went up for rebounds, dived for every loose ball he could and took charges against Georgia. Criswell said the last thing he does during his daring plays is think about his hand. Only afterward, when he has the time to reflect, does he worry about it.

"I try to lay it out all the time on defense," Criswell said. "If it (a charge) is available, I'm going to take the charge, hard or not."

"Coming up, they used to put in my head, 'everybody wants to have a guy with good energy,'" Criswell said. "They always said I could control the game without scoring."

Haith said Criswell's style of play can be crucial to a team's success.

"It's something that spreads out and motivates your team," Haith said. "Those are plays that are, when they happen, they are momentum changers. When he takes a charge or dives on the floor for a loose ball or grabs an offensive rebound they change momentum and lift the team up."

It's the type of play Missouri will need against No. 10 Florida's high-scoring offense Saturday afternoon in Gainesville, Fla.

Guard Kenny Boynton leads the team with 13.8 points per game, and guard Mike Rosario scores 12.3 points per game. Forward Erik Murphy averages 12 points and Center Patrik Young averages 11.

"When you play a team like that, your defense has to be so solid," Haith said. "We really have to be so precise in how we're defending their actions, and we have to be consistent, too."

Columbia Tribune: Tigers Need Sense of Urgency (1/23)
By Joe Waljasper

The Missouri basketball team is wounded in every sense of the word. Injured starters are missing, the last two road games were disasters and Coach Frank Haith has been a regular on the crawl at the bottom of ESPN programming for all the wrong reasons.

For most of last night's game against South Carolina, the Tigers didn't seem to grasp the urgency of their situation. It was a casual display of basketball not much better than they produced Saturday in an embarrassing loss at Florida. The only difference was the caliber of the opponent and the comfort of the setting.

Only after the deficit reached 13 points early in the second half and a frustrated Haith stripped down to business-casual attire did Missouri finally look the part of a desperate team. The Tigers beat the struggling Gamecocks 71-65 with a late-game flurry.

But they did little to prove they can function without a healthy Laurence Bowers.

Afterward, South Carolina's Frank Martin couldn't stop gushing about the atmosphere at Mizzou Arena. I have no idea what he was talking about. He's coached in the building when it was rocking, but this was not that night. The place was two-thirds full, and for most of the night you could practically smell the embalming fluid.

I don't blame the fans. There wasn't much to cheer. Mostly there were missed 3-pointers and fouls. The Tigers, who have made a habit of sleepy starts, trailed 35-27 at the half. It would have been worse, but after Missouri missed its first 13 3-point attempts, a persistent Earnest Ross finally made one 30 seconds before the break.

Haith, saying he was about to "bust a blood vessel," dressed down the team in the locker room and then undressed himself. He ditched his tie, shrugged off his jacket and seemed about one more boneheaded play from going Full Monty.
Haith just hasn't figured out how to get through to these players. During the rare spurts they're committed to playing defense, the difference between that aggressive approach and their default mode is stark. Last year's motto of passing up good shots for great ones has been retired. The Tigers won the game by hitting their last three 3-pointers — including a banked 3 by Phil Pressey — after making only two of their previous 24 attempts. Pressey's 3-pointer was lucky, although I guess when a team attempts 27 long-range shots, a stray or two is liable to bounce in.

That reliance on 3-pointers doesn't make much sense — Jabari Brown is the only healthy player shooting better than 40 percent from beyond the arc — and even less so last night because Alex Oriakhi was really bringing it inside. He was perfect on four shots from the field and 10 free throws and grabbed 11 rebounds.

Oriakhi fouled out in the last minute. Pressey spent much of the second half with four fouls, and Haith yanked him in and out situationally. Had Pressey picked up his fifth, the Tigers, 13½-point favorites, would have made a bad week even worse.

He said he actually welcomed the NCAA delivering its notice of allegations to his former employer, the University of Miami, because it would signal the end of 18 months fearing the unknown. If the contents of the NCAA report are as dire as Monday's CBSSports.com story indicated, Haith might prefer the unknown.
Haith said there is a chance Bowers, who has missed four games with a sprained knee, could play as early as Saturday's home game against Vanderbilt. That game was previously thought to be a gimme, but now, who knows? Bowers isn't the answer to all that ails the Tigers, but as recent history has shown, they're lost without him.

Columbia Tribune: Mizzou Freshmen Paying Their Dues (1/25)
By Steve Walentik

Every season there are freshmen who take to college basketball like they've been playing it all their lives. The size of the opponents, the arenas, the microscope under which teams operate — none of it fazes them.

Kevin Durant and Anthony Davis won national player-of-the-year honors at Texas and Kentucky, respectively. Davis and teammate Michael Kidd-Gilchrist led the Wildcats to a national championship. Others — including Michael Beasley, Kevin Love, John Wall and Jared Sullinger — earned All-American honors as freshmen in the past six seasons.

The success of those players and the attention they receive can make it harder to remember how big the adjustment is from high school to college. The vast majority of freshmen need months, if not an entire season, to adapt. They show glimpses of potential, but they're wildly inconsistent with deficiencies that can be exposed any moment they're on the floor.

That fairly well sums up Missouri rookies Stefan Jankovic, Negus Webster-Chan and Ryan Rosburg heading into tomorrow's 4 p.m. tipoff against Vanderbilt at Mizzou Arena. Each has cemented a place in a 10-man rotation, but all have seen their minutes fluctuate greatly from game to game, even with the team playing short-handed with injuries to Tony Criswell, Laurence Bowers, Earnest Ross and Keion Bell in the past month.

"Freshman year, it's ups and downs," said Jankovic, who produced the best performance of any MU freshman this season when he scored 14 points and grabbed five rebounds in 16 minutes off the bench against Tennessee State in early December.

But Jankovic has also sat on the bench and watched for two full games this season and, even when does play, has had a difficult time logging heavy minutes. The 6-foot-11 forward still needs to bulk up before he'll be ready to bang under the basket against college big men, so he's shifted away from his natural position to a spot on the wing that allows Missouri to make use of his intriguing shooting stroke. But that's meant he's been matched up against quicker opponents defensively. He's has had trouble shuffling his feet to stay in front of them.

Jankovic, who is averaging 4.1 points and 1.8 rebounds, is ninth on the team in minutes played (10.2) but has committed a team-high 36 fouls — roughly one every 4½ minutes he's been on the floor.

"Just being tough and willing to throw his body around and being aggressive and doing the little things," Coach Frank Haith said. "We do run good offense when he's out there, because he understands offensively from an execution standpoint, but we need him to have a physical presence."

The 6-10, 250-pound Rosburg never had much trouble with that during his years at Marquette High School, but he's quickly realized it's harder to do in college when he might find himself matched up against a chiseled 6-9, 249-pound foe, such as Florida junior Patrick Young.

"It's just a whole different world," Rosburg said. "In high school, I was a couple inches taller than every guy that I played against and just weighed more and was stronger than every guy I played against."

He never really had to worry about having his shot blocked the way it was twice in a 2-second span against Florida, leading to a shot-clock violation and one of 21 Missouri turnovers.

Rosburg did his best to continue fighting after that sequence or in the second half, when he slipped trying to guard Young and watched the Gators' forward dribble around him and throw down an emphatic dunk while he was still trying to pick himself off the court.

Bouncing back from adversity can be difficult for freshmen. Consider Webster-Chan, who appeared to get shell-shocked in the face of Illinois' defense in his first Braggin' Rights game and has struggled ever since with only three points combined in the past seven games.

"There's no question his confidence was shaken a little bit, and it shows with his play," Haith said of Webster-Chan, who is averaging 3.4 assists and 3.1 rebounds and shooting 29.4 percent from the field.

Haith did see signs of growth from Webster-Chan in Tuesday's victory over South Carolina as the 6-7 guard started his fifth game and logged 19 minutes, dishing his first two assists of the past month.

The coach will continue to give all three rookies chances to contribute, particularly with Bell and Bowers still recovering from ankle and knee injuries, respectively. Haith said yesterday he expects Bell, who injured his ankle last Saturday at Florida, to have a chance to play against the Commodores, but he sounded less optimistic that Bowers would make his return before Wednesday's game at LSU.

Columbia Missourian: Oriakhi Humble On His Offense (1/28)
By Justin Yang

A swarm of microphones and television cameras quickly form a horseshoe around forward Alex Oriakhi when he comes onto Norm Stewart Court for the Missouri men's basketball team's media day every Monday.

There is a reason for his popularity.

Oriakhi is willing to talk as long as there are questions. And whether making wisecracks about Missouri coach Frank Haith's shoes or joking about how referees let smaller guys "get away with murder," talking to Oriakhi is always entertaining.

Oriakhi scored 18 points in the Tigers' games against South Carolina and Vanderbilt. He made dunks, jump hooks and a heap of free throws. Oriakhi leads the Tigers in free throws made, with 62 this season, and is averaging 10.8 points per game.

"That's my best offense, is if I rebound," said Haith in his best impersonation of Oriakhi during Monday's news conference.

Haith says he does not want to hear those words from Oriakhi. He wants Oriakhi to be prouder of his offensive production, hoping it will lead to more confidence.

But Oriakhi said the reason he shies away from talking about his offense is not a confidence issue. He said it is because he tries to be humble about his abilities.

Oriakhi recalled a conversation former Missouri player Kim English had with the team during the summer and how English told them to be in a mentality of thinking they are never good enough. The conversation has stuck with Oriakhi.

Oriakhi's offensive spark stems from a variety of circumstances. Oriakhi credits hard work during practice as one reason for his increased production.

"When you get more reps up, you get more comfortable," Oriakhi said. "When I shoot a hook shot, I've shot it 1,000 times. The one or two times I shoot it in a game, I like the chances of it going in."

He has also had more playing time since forward Laurence Bowers' sprained his right knee.

Bowers is still questionable for Wednesday's game against Louisiana State in Baton Rouge, La. Haith said he wants to see how comfortable Bowers is with physical contact before putting him a game.

When Bowers returns, Oriakhi said he will make his offensive presence known by grabbing offensive rebounds.

"Any time a shot goes up, when I get two or three, four offensive rebounds, my offense flows pretty fluidly," Oriakhi said.

"Any big man would love it," Oriakhi said talking about his offensive role. "Especially never really being a scorer in my past few years at UConn, it's definitely fun."

There's still room for improvement for Oriakhi's offense, especially his performance on the road. Oriakhi only scored four points in games at Ole Miss and Florida.

"I've had a lot of bad games, unfortunately, on the road in my career," Oriakhi said. "One thing I do, I let it go and look forward to the next day."

STL Post-Dispatch: Oriakhi Working To Be Road Warrior (1/30)
By Stu Durando

The transfer from Connecticut is coming off complete games, performances that pushed his home averages to 12.2 points and 9.7 rebounds. He has six double-doubles at home and is shooting 61 percent.

Now Haith is ready for his 6-foot-9 center to produce similarly in less friendly surroundings. Mizzou is embarking on a stretch in which it plays four of its next six games on the road, starting tonight at LSU at 7, and a confident Oriakhi would be helpful for the 17th-ranked Tigers.

"I've had a lot of bad games, unfortunately, on the road in my career," he said. "Sometimes I get in foul trouble, and when I get in foul trouble it usually messes me up. I think a good game will be coming in my future in an away game. I have to keep working at it."

The senior has been handling a huge offensive load in the absence of Laurence Bowers and has responded at Mizzou Arena.

Now, Haith said, "We're really excited about him having a big road game because we need that out of him."

In games played away from Mizzou, Oriakhi has averaged 8.6 points and 6.7 rebounds with one double-double. And in true road games, those numbers shrink to 4.3, 5.0 and zero.

Outwardly, Oriakhi has displayed a lack of offensive confidence at times this season, noting that he really never was a scoring option at UConn. Haith good-naturedly mocked his big man at Monday's press conference, impersonating Oriakhi saying, "My best offense is if I rebound."

"He's a looney tune," Haith said. "That's part of his makeup in terms of not being as confident when he says those things. I don't like it when he says those things. He can score."

Haith has attempted to infuse the native of Lowell, Mass., with some pride and a sense of his importance to the Mizzou offense. He even scripted the first two plays to run through Oriakhi in the post in the past two games.

Early in the season, he was an inconsistent finisher around the rim, displaying a lack of touch that led to him shooting 49 percent in three seasons at UConn. This year, he's at 59 percent overall and 78 percent in conference games.

"I definitely think I'm confident, but I'm also humble and have the mind-set that you're not good enough yet," he said. "Kimmie (English) came in the summer and said, 'You have to have the mind-set that you're not good enough to take a day off.' It really hit me and my mind-set changed.

"I tell myself I'm a good player but don't let it go to my head. You always have to look forward to the future. Once you think you've played your best, you probably have."

In the game at Florida, guard Phil Pressey had 10 turnovers, and Jabari Brown made five of 18 shots. At Ole Miss, Earnest Ross was a non-factor, and the bench contributed virtually nothing.

Even if Oriakhi can manage a productive game, he'll need help. If Bowers is able to return from his sprained MCL, it would be a significant step.

But regardless of the personnel, the Tigers can't get off to the type of starts they did in the last two road games, trailing 15-2 at Florida and 14-4 at Ole Miss, if they want to get a win.

"I've watched film of the past games we've lost, and I feel we haven't been coming out to play defense," Pressey said. "We've been trying to score right away and not get stops. That allows teams to get on their runs. I've been harping on my guys every day that defense is the most important thing."

Columbia Tribune: Bowers Comes Up Big When Fan Reaches Out (2/7)
By Hillary Shipman

The Missouri basketball team had a game to forget Jan. 30 at LSU, but it was a night to remember for two MU fans.

Ryan Tripp, 33, grew up a Tigers fan in Lee's Summit. His dad attended MU in the 1970s, and he followed suit by enrolling in 1997. But his time at the university was short-lived. After one year, he left and joined the Air Force.

He was shuffled to different locations — including a four-year stint at Whiteman Air Force Base near Knob Noster — before being sent to his current stop, Keesler Air Base in Biloxi, Miss. He and his wife, Robyn, who also attended MU, are raising two children — Cayden, 8, and Nathan, 3.

Baton Rouge, La., is a 2½-hour drive from Biloxi, so Tripp bought tickets for himself and Cayden. In the days leading up to the game, Tripp sent Twitter messages to players such as Jabari Brown, Alex Oriakhi and Laurence Bowers, expressing his excitement about seeing them play.

He tweeted to Bowers: "@MU_Highflyer21 Lifetime Miz fan stationed in MS taking 8 yr old to his first bball game against LSU.Go tigers! (Wish the seats were better)."

Bowers said Tripp's tweet "caught my attention … because I'm from the South." Not to mention Tripp "fights for our country, and I have an ample amount of respect for those guys."

Bowers responded to the tweet, offering to upgrade their seats — something he says was a first for him — and expressed his appreciation for Tripp's service to the country. When he told Cayden they would be watching the game in seats given to them by Bowers, "his eyes got huge. … He just couldn't believe I was talking to a big college star."

Father and son were feeling down after the first half, with Missouri trailing 39-26, but then a family friend of Bowers' named Suzie Cowan tapped Tripp on the shoulder. She said she could introduce them to Bowers after the game. They made their way to the court after the final buzzer of the 73-70 loss.

"Suzie's like my high-school mom," Bowers said. "She came down and made it her business to figure out who this guy was and had him down there after the game."

It wasn't long before the Tripps were sharing the floor with Brown, Phil Pressey, Negus Webster-Chan and Stefan Jankovic and posing for pictures with Bowers.

"After a loss, I can't imagine how those guys were feeling," Tripp said, adding that Bowers was nonetheless very "approachable" and "talkative."

"I mean, it was a tough loss … but I felt like it was more important for me to go and meet that little kid. That would still make his day," Bowers said. Cayden "came up to me and he kept going, 'Thank you, thank you, thank you …' that's all he kept saying. I definitely felt good inside knowing that that kid had a great experience."

Tripp said he tried not to rub it in when he talked about the evening with his wife, who stayed home with their youngest child. He said he would love to make another game a family affair.

"If a tournament game gets close to us, we'll try to get there," he said.

St. Louis Post-Dispatch: Tigers Look For Rosburg To Muscle Up (2/7)
By Stu Durando

The 6-foot-10 Marquette High product discovered that he had ballooned to 260 pounds, a high water mark that took him by surprise. But while he needed to slim down, he faced the freshman task of adding muscle for the college game.

"It was two or three weeks after I graduated, I was here right away and in the weight room," he said. "That's probably the biggest thing is transforming your body. I lost 15 or 20 pounds and then tried to put on muscle, get in shape and work on my quickness."

That transition is a work in progress, his arms and shoulders lacking the definition of teammate Alex Oriakhi. But Rosburg nevertheless has been forced into early playing time, especially during the five games that Laurence Bowers was sidelined with a knee injury.

Each time he takes the floor, Rosburg has an opportunity to display the physical progress he has made. At this point, that's what his playing time is all about for coach Frank Haith.

"Just being tough and willing to throw his body around and be aggressive, do the little things," Haith said when asked his expectations of Rosburg. "We do run good offense when he's out there because he understands offensively from an execution standpoint. But we need him to have a physical presence."
Rosburg understands that his 20-point, 11-rebound days at Marquette High are a thing of the past. A year ago, he was bigger and stronger than virtually every player he faced.

Although he played only three minutes recently against South Carolina and four against Vanderbilt, Rosburg saw his minutes increase when Bowers was injured with a sprained knee.

He played 17 minutes at Ole Miss, 10 against Georgia and a career-high 23 at Florida. He continues to be called upon in every game to deliver relief, and as close as games have been, those minutes can be critical.

"We have a lot of guys on this team that can score, and Coach is emphasizing it's not going to be about scoring for me," said Rosburg, whose brother, Andy, was a walk-on last season. "I have to be a guy who dives on the floor, takes charges, goes after long rebounds and tries to guard the best player the best I can. All the little things to help our team."

Rosburg is going to be doing things in little bits, no doubt. He is averaging 8.2 minutes — having missed one game — 1.3 points and 1.5 rebounds. It's a long way from his days at Marquette, where he averaged 19.7 points and 10.7 rebounds as a senior.

Strength wasn't as big a deal in high school. To prepare for college, he not only got a jump on the weight room but in practice last summer against Oriakhi as the Tigers prepared for their European tour.

But the biggest challenge he faces is at the defensive end. That made the game at Florida last month a major challenge. Rosburg and his teammates held their own against Young, who had nine points and six turnovers.

"He's a big, strong physical guy and it was a big challenge for me," Rosburg said. "Playing against guys like Patric Young takes a lot more energy on my part. I'm still adjusting to the game and trying to impose my will as much as I can because when I got in, I don't know how long it's going to be. I have to go as hard as I can for two or three minutes."

Columbia Tribune: Pressey Tries To Find Winning Form (2/19)
By Steve Walentik

Missouri point guard Phil Pressey played so carefree, creating scoring chances and producing highlights so easily. That was last year, during a sterling sophomore season.

Pressey steered one of the country's most efficient offenses, but he was surrounded by veterans who accepted responsibility to deliver every time out during Coach Frank Haith's first season.

"We had a senior-led team. Those guys played together for a while and not so much was looked upon me," Pressey said.

Some of it could be self-imposed, but Pressey, whose team will tip off against No. 5 Florida (21-3, 11-1 SEC) at 8 tonight at Mizzou Arena, has felt much more pressure to produce as a junior.

Now he's the veteran, the only holdover who played minutes for a team that went 30-5 and won the Big 12 Tournament title a year ago. Voted the Southeastern Conference preseason player of the year, Pressey has expected himself to drive Missouri (18-7, 7-5) to similar heights this season.

"Make the play, whether it's an assist to my team or hitting that shot," Pressey said. "I feel like I should be making the play toward the end." Too often those plays have gone awry, particularly on the road.

The latest example came Saturday in a 73-71 loss at Arkansas when Pressey lost the ball under pressure near midcourt with the Tigers trailing by one with less than 13 seconds remaining. The turnover was his fourth of the day and 33rd in five SEC road games.

Pressey did get one more chance to deliver a victory, motoring up the floor and pitching to Jabari Brown for an errant 3-pointer as time expired. Missouri fell to 1-6 on the road this season.

"I take the responsibility," he said. "Every single one of these losses is on me. I'm not afraid to say that."

He bore a lot of the blame for the Tigers' getting routed at Florida when he committed a career-high 10 turnovers and shot 1 for 7 from the field. And at LSU when he went 1 for 9 from 3-point range, missing a pair of quick 3-pointers in the final minute. And at Texas A&M, when his errant pass flew out of bounds, he lost track of his man, Fabyon Harris, for a go-ahead 3-point shot and missed his own 3-pointer on MU's final possession.

"He's had some plays like he just loses the ball, like it's the right play but it just doesn't finish well for him, and then, obviously, he's had some of those tough decisions," Haith said. "I do know that Phil is working hard to be very good down the stretch, and he was outstanding in that role last year."

Pressey never attempted more than 15 shots in a game last season. He was a facilitator with an uncanny ability to get the ball to the right man at the right time, whether it was Marcus Denmon spotting up on the wing, Kim English in the corner or Ricardo Ratliffe in the paint. He led the Big 12 in assists (6.4) while boasting its second-best assist-to-turnover ratio (2.26) during league play.

This season, he's already taken more than 15 shots six times, including four games with more than 20. His assist totals have climbed to an SEC-leading 6.8, but his efficiency numbers are down. He's shooting a career-worst 36.6 percent from the field and has a career-high 92 turnovers with an assist-to-turnover ratio of 1.6 in SEC play.

Compare those numbers to the ones belonging to his Florida counterpart, Scottie Wilbekin, who is directing an offense about as efficient as Missouri's was last season. He is averaging 9.4 points to Pressey's 12 but is shooting 46.8 percent from the field while posting an assist-to-turnover ratio of 2.6 during league play.

"Sometimes guys, they don't quite accept who they really are as a player," Haith said. "I have this saying: 'Do you. Just do you. Don't try to do anybody else or play out of character. Just do you.'

"What Phil is — and I've said this many times — he's a guy that when he's on his game he makes guys around him better. … That's not to say he can't score, because he can, but I think when he's at his best is when he's playmaking and getting guys involved."
His interest in shooting more has led to questions about whether Pressey has the same faith in new teammates such as Keion Bell, Alex Oriakhi and Jabari Brown or even holdover Laurence Bowers as he did in last season's Tigers.

"I do want him to continue to trust the guys around him," Haith said. "They're all pretty good players."

Those players continue to trust in Pressey despite his struggles.

"We still have a lot of confidence in him as our point guard," Oriakhi said. "He's definitely done some wonderful things this season. You've got to take the good with the bad."

St. Louis Post-Dispatch: Haith Keeps Faith In Pressey (2/19)
By Vahe Gregorian

Exactly a month since Mizzou's Jan. 19 fiasco at Florida sent shudders through anyone anticipating major feats by the Tigers this season, MU has a chance at 8 tonight at Mizzou Arena to rekindle ambitious early hopes when it takes on the fifth-ranked Gators.

A chance, to be sure.

But hardly a given, even if the Tigers are 14-0 at home this season, 29-1 there in Frank Haith's two seasons and 81-4 over the last five.

The Gators are 21-3 overall, 11-1 in Southeastern Conference, records that reflect smothering defense and selfless offense enabled by a veteran lineup that has what Haith called "a great feel for each other."

But while MU has been apt to do that to itself in true road games (1-6), the Tigers have been so impregnable at home that Florida figures to face a substantial challenge despite the 83-52 clobbering it inflicted on Mizzou last month.

"They kicked our butts pretty well; I'm not going to lie to you and say we don't want revenge," said MU forward Alex Oriakhi, who was gridlocked by foul trouble in the first outing and limited to four points and two rebounds. "We want to show we're one of the best teams in America. … We want to get redemption."

No one may be more pivotal in the hope for a turnaround than junior guard Phil Pressey, who has gone from SEC preseason player of the year to the scapegoat for much that has ailed Mizzou (7-5 SEC, 18-7 overall).

That label has become more affixed to him with nearly every MU road game, several of which have been marked by either his misjudgments or inability to consistently execute – particularly down the stretch.

At Florida, Pressey had six assists and 10 turnovers and was zero for four from 3-point range, statistics consistent with his overall stats in SEC road games.

In those six games, he has 30 assists and 33 turnovers and is one of 23 from 3-point range.
Meanwhile, at home in SEC play, Pressey has a 46-16 assist-to-turnover ratio and is 10 of 26 on 3-pointers.

"Every single one of those losses are on me; I'm not afraid to say that," Pressey said, adding that that outlook is "the life I live" and facing that and learning to improve is what it takes to be the best. "You can't complain over spilled milk; you've just got to clean it up."

Even as Haith seeks to clean up MU's late-game play, he was unflinching in his public support of Pressey.

"He's our guy, love him, and we're going to continue to help him through it and help ourselves," Haith said, later adding, "We've got to show him confidence and our belief in him. … That's all we can do. I'm not going to shred his confidence by taking the ball out of his hands, for sure. …

Reminiscent of losses at LSU and Texas A&M, Pressey had a turnover with about 10 seconds left in MU's 73-71 loss Saturday at Arkansas.

He was jostled on the play, one of a streak of debatable calls down the stretch that Mizzou didn't get.

"That was a tough play," Haith said. "I don't know that that was all Phil, but give Arkansas credit."

Pressey and the team also might have been hampered by another officiating curiosity seconds later.

On MU's inbound pass after B.J. Young's free throw with 5.3 seconds left, Pressey let the ball bounce to preserve ticks on the clock before picking it up only for the clock to start, anyway.

So instead of Pressey being at halfcourt with 5 seconds to go he was left hurrying a pass to Jabari Brown, who was lucky to get off a 3-pointer before the buzzer but misfired.

"There's a whole bunch of 'what ifs?' " he said, adding, "You can't really say because it never happened."

Glaring as his miscues were in a game in which he went two of nine from the field and committed four turnovers with just two assists, Pressey hardly was alone in contributing to MU's latest loss.

Brown was two of 10 from the field and committed five turnovers, and Laurence Bowers, out of rhythm since returning from a knee injury he suffered last month, was one of 10 as MU's frontline starters were outscored 37-9.

But "right now" already is a memory, and no longer Saturday's game but tonight's, and Bowers believes he's on the verge of resuming his early-season play just as the Tigers need to hit stride.

"You've got to flip the script," Haith said. "You've got to stay in the present. You can't worry about the past, because you can't do anything about it other than use it for a reference to get better."

Park Cities People: Pressey Having Big Season For Mizzou (2/26)
By Chuck Cox

When Phil Pressey arrived at Missouri as a freshman point guard three years ago, his brother Matt was one of his teammates; his coach was Mike Anderson; and the Tigers were in the Big 12 Conference. None of those things is true now.

But just like he does while running the show on the court, Pressey goes with the flow with supreme confidence, never flinching in the face of adversity.

And this season, Missouri's first in the Southeastern Conference, has had plenty of both triumph and tribulations. Through it all, the former Episcopal School of Dallas standout and son of former NBA player Paul Pressey has emerged as one of the top players in the nation. Entering tonight's game at South Carolina, Pressey was averaging 12.4 points, 3.2 rebounds, and 7.0 assists per game. He is also one of a dozen finalists for the Bob Cousy National Point Guard of the Year Award.

I'm a junior now, and I know the ropes," Phil said. "The game is becoming a lot easier for me. That comes with experience. My work ethic allows me to perform at a high level. It's just in my nature — not because he [Paul] played in the NBA; I just always wanted to be the best. I want to be the best point guard and best player I can be. When I'm not considered the best point guard, it makes me work even harder. That's how I was born."

The Tigers (19-8, 8-6) are perfect at home this season after a huge victory over Florida on Feb. 19. But Mizzou has suffered some gut-wrenching losses on the road, including Saturday's 90-83 overtime loss at Kentucky and a tough 70-68 setback at Texas A&M this month in which Pressey turned the ball over late with a one-point lead. The next game, he bounced back to score 22 points and become the all-time assists leader for the Tigers in a 98-79 whipping of a good Ole Miss team.

"You have nay-sayers who say, 'Oh, he's too small or too this,' " ESD head basketball coach Corey Henderson said. "To me, he's a leader. And it's hard to find a true, genuine leader. He already has what I call 'the it factor.' He's a winner and a gamer. He makes things happen out on the court without shooting the ball."

Both Paul Pressey, who is credited for originating the point forward position in the NBA, and his wife, Liz, played college basketball at Tulsa. Paul played for Milwaukee, San Antonio, and Golden State in a pro career that spanned more than a decade. Phil's sister, Angie, played volleyball for Cal. Clearly, Phil had a strong gene pool working in his favor.

"My kids grew up around basketball," said Paul, who is now an assistant coach for the Cleveland Cavaliers. "I told them all, 'Y'all are going to play something, so pick a sport.' My wife and myself always believed in being active. We wanted to get our kids to have as much activity as possible. That's a good thing to have in your life — being active and playing a team sport. They hit basketball pretty hard."

Phil was a three-year starter at ESD. He recorded the program's first triple-double and led the Eagles to a pair of Southwest Preparatory Conference titles. Henderson's son, Corey Jr., also notched a triple-double this season.
"It's a good thing to be alumni from there," Phil said. "It's a great school. I got a great education there. Coach Henderson has got the basketball program going well since I left. His son is playing well, too."

The feeling is mutual for his former school and former coach.

"It's very exciting," Henderson said. "To have the opportunity to coach him here, and to see him on TV, and follow his career in college is really good and refreshing. A lot of the kids here look up to him. He's somebody they can say is their own. He's a big part of the community and the continued success we've had. He was a big part of two state championships here."

Mizzou won 23 games Phil's freshman year and 30 last season. Each year ended with a first-round loss in the NCAA Tournament to Cincinnati and Norfolk State, respectively. If the Tigers are going to take the next step, Phil will have to lead them there.

"Phil's a great player and a great kid," second-year Tigers head coach Frank Haith said. "He's a special young man. We're very fortunate to have him."

With his name already etched in the record books in Columbia, Phil hopes to lead the Tigers to their first NCAA Tournament win since 2010 before he very likely follows his father's footsteps into the NBA.

"It's all about the right place at the right time," Paul said. "His choice of going to Missouri was a great choice for him. Even though the coaching change and all of that happened, things happen for a reason. You deal with that, make the adjustment, and you keep moving. It was great to see him play beside his older brother. I got to see them play four games last year because of our lockout. I also got to see them on TV periodically. It's nice to see your kids do well."

Columbia Tribune: Pressey Will Keep The Ball (2/28)
By Steve Walentik

For Frank Haith, there's never been a question about who should have the ball when the Missouri basketball team needs to make a play in the waning seconds of a close game.

Missouri is making its first trip to Columbia, S.C., and looking for its second road victory of the season when it takes on South Carolina. MU is 1-7 in road games this season, though the last four losses have come by single digits.

The Tigers won the first meeting between the schools, rallying from a 13-point deficit for a 71-65 victory Jan. 22. They played that game without leading scorer Laurence Bowers and starting guard Keion Bell, who were recovering from injuries.

The Gamecocks beat Mississippi 63-62 last week at Colonial Life Arena to snap a six-game losing streak. They are 9-7 at home this season but only 2-5 in Southeastern Conference play.

"Every team, late game, you want the ball in your best player's hands, a guy that can make plays for your guys," Haith said, "and I think that's what we try to do with him."

But Pressey has been on the hook for a series of late-game lapses in judgment that have resulted in untimely turnovers and questionable shots that have weighed heavily into the outcome of road losses to UCLA, LSU, Texas A&M and Arkansas.
Kentucky joined the list Saturday when Pressey's shot over Alex Poythress in the final seconds of regulation wouldn't drop, and he wound up making two costly errors that doomed Missouri's chances in the last minute of overtime.

The first mistake came with the Tigers trailing by a basket with just less than a minute remaining. Pressey got caught in the air after changing his mind about a 3-point shot and unloaded the ball to no one in particular. Poythress tracked it down, was fouled and made two free throws to make it a two-possession game.

Then, with the deficit at four and 37 seconds left, Pressey missed a 3-pointer fired quickly from behind two screens at the top of the key, all but ending Missouri's chance of a late rally. A frustrated Haith could only go stomping toward the end of the bench while Kentucky went the other way, moving closer to finishing off its 90-83 victory.

It's reasonable to wonder, in the wake of that loss, whether the Tigers might need a different plan of attack when it comes to finishing close games, especially away from home.

But it's difficult to come up with a definitive answer as Missouri (19-8, 8-6 Southeastern Conference) heads back on the road to play South Carolina (13-14, 3-11) at 8 tonight at Colonial Life Arena in Columbia, S.C.

Haith has good reasons for giving Pressey the ball. He might be the MU player most adept at creating his own shot and averages an SEC-leading seven assists this season.

"If he doesn't have a shot for himself, he's going to find someone else," senior center Alex Oriakhi said. "When everybody focuses on him in late game, he might be able to penetrate and find the open man. So without a doubt you want the ball in Phil's hands at the end of the game."

Haith watched Pressey play nearly flawlessly down the stretch Saturday at Rupp Arena. In the final 5:07 of regulation, he sank a 3-pointer, assisted on back-to-back baskets by Oriakhi, made passes that led to layups by Laurence Bowers and Keion Bell and set up Tony Criswell on a play that resulted in two free throws as the Tigers rallied from a seven-point deficit. If that wasn't enough, he also came up with a steal and layup that got Missouri the lead with 57 seconds remaining.

"I got in a little bit of a rhythm of" calling a "certain offensive set that was really good for us," Haith said. "That was the double high ball screen, and he was making all the right plays off it every single time."

At least until he launched the 3-pointer near the end of overtime.

Pressey finished the game with a career-high 27 points and added 10 assists to become the first MU player with 20 points and 10 assists in a game since Melvin Booker did so in the famous triple-overtime Braggin' Rights victory over Illinois in 1993.

He finished with 19 points and a school-record 19 assists against UCLA and scored 25 points with five assists and five steals against LSU. He didn't shoot the ball well against Texas A&M and committed seven turnovers but still piled up nine points while leading the Tigers back from a 13-point second-half deficit. He assisted on Laurence Bowers' 3-pointer that gave MU the lead with 53 seconds to play.
Only in the Arkansas loss was it hard to see Pressey's positive impact. He finished 2 for 9 from the field and had only two assists against the Razorbacks.

Still, his successes can't cover up the mistakes, including a total of nine turnovers in the final four minutes of regulation and any overtime in those five losses.

His job is made harder because opponents expect him to have the ball and have five defenders waiting to react to his every move.

"I feel like I'm the target," Pressey said. "They know I'm either going to be shooting the ball or making a play for my teammates, so they're going to be locked in on me. I mean, that's what comes with being one of the best players on the court."

Just because Pressey accepts it as inevitable doesn't mean the Tigers have to.

"I think we've just got to take pressure off him somehow," Oriakhi said. "I don't know. … I think another guard has to come to the ball or do something, or maybe we should start with somebody else with the ball and then have Phil close the game out. … I think we put too much pressure on him just sitting there relaxing and just watching him."

Columbia Tribune: Bowers Earns Admiration (3/5)
By Steve Walentik

He squinted, wrinkled his nose and began rocking his head up and down as if sobbing.

"I'm going to cry," Laurence Bowers said as he walked into the interview room at Mizzou Arena after practice one snowy day last week.

He was joking.

Bowers had been tipped off to the subject of the conversation. He knew he was going to be asked to reflect on the joy and pain of his time at Missouri with only a week remaining before his final home game.

The truth is, Bowers isn't completely overtaken by nostalgia. His stay in Columbia has lasted longer than he imagined when he moved to town from Memphis, Tenn., five years ago, and he doesn't hide the fact that he is ready to begin the next phase of his life.

He will miss it, though.

"This place has been great," he said.

But Bowers might get a little emotional tonight as he walks to the middle of Norm Stewart Court to greet Coach Frank Haith and receive a framed jersey during senior night festivities before the Tigers' 6 p.m. tipoff against Arkansas.

He won't be alone.

"I'll probably cry," said Nancy Bowers, the single mother he's forever indebted to because of the struggles she went through to raise him. "It's been a long road."

There could be more tears from his aunt Mary Bowers and uncle Arlyn Bowers, who lent support and pushed him to where he is today. They're just a few of the family and friends — including his younger sister, Amelia Brown, and longtime girlfriend, Feven Melake — scheduled to be in attendance tonight.

Haith figures to be moved, as well, as he congratulates Bowers on a career that could end with him among the 25 most productive players in school history. He's already scored 1,178 points, grabbed 611 rebounds and blocked 148 shots.

Even the opposing coach has a rooting interest in Bowers' success. Whether it's fitting or ironic, Mike Anderson, who gave Bowers his college start, will be on the visiting bench. He and his Razorbacks assistants maintain a strong connection with the 6-foot-8, 227-pound forward.

"I'm excited for him and happy for him," Anderson said.

There also will be plenty of appreciation shown by Missouri fans because Bowers has endeared himself to them like few others.

"Just a great ambassador for the university," Haith said. "Laurence has done all the right things. He's been a quality student-athlete, and I think he's embraced the community here in Columbia, and he's a great player. I think you couldn't ask for anything better as a college coach … than to coach a guy like Laurence Bowers."

The first is his membership in the 2008 recruiting class, a group that also included Marcus Denmon and Kim English that helped restore the program to national prominence.

Those players arrived at a time when MU was five years removed from its last NCAA Tournament appearance and coming off a 16-16 season most remembered for a nightclub fight. They brought a fresh and optimistic outlook when the Tigers needed it, and following the lead of veterans DeMarre Carroll, Leo Lyons, Matt Lawrence and J.T. Tiller, helped Missouri win a Big 12 Tournament title and make an Elite Eight run in Anderson's third season.

From his earliest days, the long-armed and high-flying Bowers excited crowds with his dunks. But he also had to overcome some trials before coming a consistent and well-rounded player.

"I've got a story to tell about my time here at Mizzou," he said.

While Denmon and English were instant contributors, with English starting 13 games his freshman season, Bowers had to bide his time in a crowded frontcourt that featured Carroll and Lyons and had Keith Ramsey and Justin Safford in reserve.

He bulked up before his sophomore season and improved his skills. With Carroll and Lyons gone, he emerged as a regular contributor, starting the final six games and scoring 15 points in an NCAA Tournament victory over Clemson.

Bowers really took off as a junior when he finished second on the team in scoring (11.6) and led the way in rebounds (6.1) while swatting the third-most shots (62) in school history.

There were high hopes for what he might do as a senior in Haith's first year, but they came crashing down as hard as he did after catching an errant alley-oop pass during a pickup game in early October. Bowers landed awkwardly on his left leg and felt a pop in his knee. The next day, his worst fears were realized. His anterior cruciate ligament was torn, ending his season before it ever began.

Rather sleeping off the physical pain or simply sulking in his apartment, he joined teammates English and Jarrett Sutton at the Columbia Public Library, walking on crutches to the front of a room of about 20 elementary school children so he could read aloud, "If You Give a Mouse a Cookie."

"I figured it would still make their day if I would have showed up, so I went and I put my personal problems on the back burner," Bowers said.

"He's just a genuinely good guy," said guard Keion Bell, who'll be honored with Bowers and fellow transfer Alex Oriakhi during senior night festivities. "He's very selfless in his actions, and he puts others before himself, and that's how he's able to be such a good leader for us this year. Everything that he does, it's just positive."

Bowers frequently has been among the first Missouri players to jump at opportunities to give back, whether it's reading to school kids, visiting the children's hospital or taking part in clinics with the Special Olympics.
"I've always been one of those guys that, 'How can you serve others?' " he said. "That's just how my family is."

He remains appreciative of all the people — from his late grandmother Laverne to aunts and uncles, family friends, parents of teammates, high school teachers and coaches — who have helped him throughout his life.

"Pretty much everything I do is in hopes of me bettering her situation," said Bowers, including chasing his dream of playing in the NBA.

Bowers and his father, Laurence Young, have a close relationship today, but Young wasn't around for much of Bowers' childhood, leaving Nancy to try to support him, often on her own.

Roderick Brown, Amelia's father, provided him with a male figure from age 4 until the fifth grade when Bowers and Nancy lived with him in Proctor, Ark.

That's where Nancy, a high school softball player, basketball player and swimmer, first exposed Bowers to organized sports because it was the best way she could think of to keep him occupied living in the small town 25 miles west of Memphis. Baseball became his first love.

Nancy and Brown split up not long after Amelia was born, and Nancy brought her two children back across the Mississippi River, working a series of warehouse jobs.

Mary and Arlyn Bowers pitched in to aid their older sister, sometimes financially but always by pushing Bowers to do better. Mary, a teacher at Kirby Middle School in Memphis, preached the importance of education.

"I made it my business to work with him pretty much 24-7," she said. "When I got out of school and he got out of school, school was not out."

She is particularly proud that the framed jersey isn't the only thing he'll get to keep from his time in Columbia. He already graduated with a bachelor's degree in sociology last spring and is on track to earn his master's in health education and promotion this semester.

Arlyn, a former Razorbacks guard best known for the rugged defense he played for Nolan Richardson and assistant coach Anderson, is responsible for nurturing it. He first noticed the potential in Bowers, always a tall kid, when he was in junior high and began working him out and developing his skills.

Bowers, also a standout pitcher, turned his attention to basketball full time around the time he signed to play at Missouri in 2007. Often, uncle and nephew would go to the fire department gym — Arlyn is a lieutenant in the Memphis Fire Department — late at night when Bowers was home over breaks early in his college career, and they would work on ballhandling, rebounding and making himself a threat to score.

Arlyn has found creative ways to motivate Bowers.

When he was younger, he would drive him through some of Memphis' ritzier neighborhoods and even pop into open houses that might be going on in them.

They'd look around the large yards and stylish interiors, and Arlyn would have a message he wanted Bowers to remember when they left. "I'd tell him, 'This can be yours,' " Arlyn said.

More recently, he sent his nephew pictures of himself bench-pressing more than 250 pounds and asked, "What are you doing?"

Bowers needed Arlyn pushing him again after yet another setback this season. When he collided with teammate Phil Pressey late in the second half of Missouri's SEC opener against Alabama, Bowers again felt a pop, this time in his right knee. He immediately thought his college career was over.

"That was the hardest," Bowers said. "I kept questioning, 'Why?' You try not to question what God does, because you know there's no mistakes, but you get to a point where you're just like, 'Man, what is it? You've got my attention. What's going on?'"

Bowers scored 20 points in Missouri's opener. Showing off a more dependable jumper and expanded range — even if he was a little less explosive soaring above the rim — he continued to be the Tigers' top offensive threat for the remainder of the nonconference schedule. He reached double figures in 13 of the first 14 games and was averaging 16.8 points and 6.9 rebounds when, out of nowhere, came the latest injury.

Fortunately for him and the Tigers, it turned out to be merely a sprained medial collateral ligament.

Bowers sat out five games and needed another six or seven to get his timing back, but he appears to have recaptured his earlier form after scoring 23 points and grabbing 10 rebounds in Saturday's victory over LSU.

The Tigers are hoping Bowers can keep it up and lead them to a strong finish — which would also help him grab the attention of professional scouts.

"Definitely, if we win, it helps," Bowers said. "I'm just buying into what Coach wants me to buy into, and I'm going to give it my all these last few games and just hope that everybody else does."

"I know this is going to be a big, huge night for him," Bell said. "Just to send Laurence Bowers out with the W would be a perfect senior night for me, and that's all I really care about. I don't care how it's done. I don't care what type of night that I have just to send him out with a victory."

STL Post-Dispatch: Mizzou Team Built On Transfers Connects Tigers To The Future (3/12)
By Vahe Gregorian

By the somewhat self-serving reckoning of former Mizzou coach Mike Anderson, anyway, MU coach Frank Haith last season was left by Anderson a team that "probably could have contended for a Final Four."

However accurate that may or may not, what Anderson left also came with a mirage over the horizon from his purported one-year wonderland of players.

Inheriting a team brimming with seniors but with no incoming freshmen, Haith was left with the predicament of filling 10 scholarships in two years, a daunting task believed to be among the reasons Purdue coach Matt Painter declined the job.

"To have a program, you need to balance your classes out," Haith said. "For us to go out and sign a bunch of freshmen wouldn't have been fair to those guys at that time, because they're probably not going to be good enough to play (immediately) at this level."

Thus, Haith contrived, concocted and otherwise cobbled together the 2012-2013 Tigers from an unorthodox blueprint hinging on five transfers in Mizzou's regular seven-man rotation as it prepares to begin postseason play Thursday in the Southeastern Conference tournament against the winner of today's game between Texas A&M and Auburn.

With just two returnees – junior guard Phil Pressey and senior Laurence Bowers, who missed last season with a knee injury – a team that began as what Haith frequently called a "work in progress" to some degree yet remains in development.

But it's blossomed well beyond being a group that was hard to corral and conduct as the horde of newcomers was ripping out old wiring and adjusting to entirely new demands on how to play and learning to mesh with each other all at once.

And it has.

With newcomers largely having bought into their new roles, the Tigers (22-9 overall, 11-7 SEC) have won four of their last six and have contended late in all but three games this season.

It may be that a vexing habit of losing close games will be their ultimate stamp, but it also may be that they are on the cusp of busting loose.

"I feel like if we have that one breakthrough," Bowers said, "I think that that confidence will shoot up a little bit and we'll get on a roll."

If so, it would be virtually impossible for anyone inclined to imitate Haith's approach to reproduce it because of the unique circumstances by which this hodge-podge was assembled:

Flash a Batlight in the sky, or whatever it is that Haith did to make it known he was seeking to recruit transfers of varying class years.

Listen for the murmurs of restlessness, monitor the de facto waiver wires of players seeking their release and evaluate whether a young man's discontent was a matter of his makeup or just foul chemistry elsewhere.

Somehow it all resulted in a group that Haith says defies the "negative connotation" of transfers and is prospering in the classroom and apparently has been as much a fit as a hit.

"Although I've only been here for one year, it doesn't feel like that at all," senior guard Keion Bell said, adding, "It feels like I've kind of been here for my whole career."

Bell is perhaps the greatest convert, a recovering conscienceless shooter at Pepperdine, where he averaged 16.4 points and 13 shots a game, played token defense and had conflicts with coaches.

At MU, he played much of the league season at an All-SEC level by becoming Mizzou's best on-ball defender and a discriminating shooter who hits 54 percent of his eight shots a game.

That's 13 percent better than his junior year at Pepperdine; Bell also has become among the best free-throw shooters in the SEC (87.l percent) after never before making better than 75 percent in a season.

Yet the more improbable newcomer is senior forward Alex Oriakhi, who played on a national championship team at Connecticut in 2011, became disillusioned with there last season and was immediately able to play upon leaving when the Huskies ruled ineligible for the NCAA Tournament.

"We had (a scholarship) late," Haith said. "A lot of people didn't have one late for Alex. Did I know Alex was leaving? No. We just had one, and it just so happened it worked out."

It also just so happened that Oriakhi was close to Pressey, with whom he had played AAU basketball. The two were in regular contact throughout the process.

"Once I got my release, my phone was just blowing up with a whole bunch of coaches" calling, said Oriakhi, who also was considering Kentucky but said at "the end of the day" he wanted to play with Pressey.

At MU, he has overcome what he has characterized as a near aversion to scoring – he averaged 7.2 points his first three seasons – to average 13.6 points (and 8.4 rebounds) the last five games, which included an SEC player of the week honor.

Now, he says, he feels like he's been here four years, so much so that Mizzou is what he wants to be identified with more than Connecticut.

"Other people might not like that," he said, smiling. "But oh, well."

Brown wasn't eligible until the second semester, but he's entrenched as a starter now, leads MU with 50 3-pointers and 14.6 points a game in league play.

In key reserve roles, junior guard Earnest Ross (from Auburn) and junior forward Tony Criswell (Alabama-Birmingham and Independence Community College) have given Mizzou spark and muscle.

Ross is making 43.4 percent of his 3-pointers off the bench and is averaging 4.4 rebounds and 1.6 steals in SEC play, ninth in the league.

Criswell is a grinding defender, MU's most willing charge-taker and averaging 4.9 rebounds.

That group, along with leading scorer Bowers and Pressey, makes MU an intriguing possibility to go beyond the first-round NCAA flameout of a year ago.

And along with freshmen contributors Ryan Rosburg, Negus Webster-Chan and Stefan Jankovic, the group enabled roster balance and helped build a bridge to a future that had been more defined by the awaiting void than the talent when Haith took over.

Kansas City Star: Pressey Embraces Pressure For Tigers (3/12)
By Terez Paylor

In the aftermath of another depressing finish, Phil Pressey sat at his locker, his head tucked in his shirt. There were no tears, no explanations for what just happened. Only questions.

"Why does this keep happening to me?" Pressey asked as teammates consoled him.

Missouri had just lost another Southeastern Conference road game. And once again, the junior point guard's late mistake had been the most glaring.

Despite leading the SEC in assists this season at 7.1 per game, the 5-foot-11 Pressey has become a lightning rod for criticism because of his inconsistent shooting, rising number of turnovers and miscues in the clutch.

The Tigers are 2-8 on the road this season, with six of those losses marked by either a late turnover or missed jumper. That includes Pressey's errant pass on Feb. 7 at Texas A&M that led to the Aggies' game-winning three and left him despondent in the locker room.

Coaches, teammates and others — including Pressey's father, Cleveland Cavaliers assistant coach and former NBA player Paul Pressey — all have theories for Phil's struggles. Pressey, who wants to prove himself in the NBA one day, does as well.

They all agree on this: If the 22-9 Tigers are going to play to their potential, they will need their alpha dog — the man MU coach Frank Haith has called "Batman" this season after spending the last one as "Robin" — to play to his potential, too.

Pressey says he accepts the responsibility.

"When we win, it's on me. When we lose, it's on me," Pressey said recently, before the Tigers prepared to open the SEC Tournament on Thursday in Nashville, Tenn. "It's one of the things you've got to live with."
At age 22, Phil Pressey fancies himself a student of basketball. He idolizes the great true point guards of today, such as NBA stars Steve Nash and Chris Paul. And their philosophy, aside from making the right play "99 times out of 100," Pressey said, is to get others involved early, then score if need be.

This year is different. Pressey has taken at least 15 shots, his game-high in attempts, nine times this season. He's shooting 38.1 percent from the field and 30.8 from three-point range, well below last season's marks of 42.8 and 36.5.

"People have been killing me, but I don't really pay that any mind because I'm, like, in transition mode," Pressey said. "I'm trying to figure out my game … so it's more of a learning process, and you're going to fail a lot of times when you're going through that."

Some of this has to do with increased usage. Pressey is playing 33.7 minutes per game, only slightly higher than the 32.1 minutes he averaged last season, but 8.2 minutes more than the next highest Tiger. Senior guard Michael Dixon's departure from the team in December has also added to Pressey's load.

Pressey didn't feel the need to shoot much last season, when he could guide the offense and distribute the ball to seniors Marcus Denmon and Kim English. That's happened at times this season. For example, Pressey racked up nine assists and didn't take a shot in 32 minutes against South Carolina on Feb. 28.

Most of Pressey's failures have come at the end of games in the form of hurried jumpers, which have perhaps overshadowed some of his better performances. Pressey, who averages 11.9 points per game, had a 19-point, 19-assist game at UCLA and a 27-point, 10-assist night at Kentucky. But both games ended in losses.

"It hurts me more than anything, because I know I work on those shots," Pressey said. "In practice, I don't miss those shots. And when I say I don't miss, I don't miss."

By all accounts, Pressey is the team's hardest worker. He has a relentless daily shooting routine where he forces himself to make at least 10 of 14 shots from 14 different spots on the floor. Pressey watches the most film, too, which recently helped him correct a flaw in his shooting form.

Associate head coach Tim Fuller said Pressey is a highly accurate long-distance shooter when he gets his feet set — about 60 percent accurate, according to MU's advanced stats. The problem is most of his shots come off the dribble, where he's less efficient.

"You're going to live and die with your best player," Fuller said. "Ultimately, all great players are this way … they trust themselves more than they trust anybody else. So because he has the ball in his hands, he trusts himself and he's in position, he's going to shoot it."

Especially when Pressey, who has followed Haith's instructions to be more vocal this season, is still learning how to lead. Haith said he sent Pressey several supportive text messages last weekend following MU's loss at Tennessee, which speaks to a relationship that Pressey said is strong.

"He and I have a great connection," Pressey said. "So if he yells at me for taking that shot or he takes me out, it's kind of a teaching (moment) because I know what he wants, and what he wants is best for the team.

"I just feel like with him coaching me, I'm learning every day. I'm not perfect."

Paul Pressey always taught his youngest son that he couldn't ask his teammates to do anything he wasn't doing himself, which has served Phil well in his role as team co-captain. He also taught him something else:

"You can't step up if you've never taken the chance to," said Paul, a former first-round NBA Draft pick who played 11 years in the NBA. "Some battles you win, some battles you lose, and those hurt him. But I told him they are supposed to hurt, because if they don't, it doesn't mean that much to you."

Phil Pressey has experienced his share of pain. Aside from the Texas A&M game, Missouri's road losses at LSU, Kentucky and Arkansas were all marred by late turnovers or missed jumpers by Pressey. And most recently, in Missouri's 64-62 loss at Tennessee on Saturday, Pressey grabbed a rebound with 22 seconds left and MU trailing by three, only to hoist a long, errant three-pointer. An air ball.

This, of course, drew the ire of Haith, who has also harped on the need for Pressey to cut down on his turnovers, which have risen from 85 last season to 114 in four fewer games.

Haith, however, is hesitant to rein in Pressey too much, lest he hinder his creativity.

"Great point guards have a great feel to make plays," Haith said. "… He has made a lot of right decisions in his career, too. What Phil needs to continue to do is just believe in himself and trust what he's doing and not become passive or gun-shy."

It doesn't sound like that will be a problem.

"Some of my turnovers are kind of me trying to force things in there," Pressey said, "because I'm trying to get somebody going."

Paul Pressey — who watches all his son's games — tends to believe fatigue has also played a role in Phil's higher turnover rate. This, despite Keion Bell's emergence as another solid scorer and ballhandler for the Tigers.

"He's the only pressure release, so in crunch time, he's got Earnest (Ross) and Keion on the wings and he's thinking he's got to make the play," Matt Pressey said. "Teams pick up on that and they double him and triple him and throw stuff at him."

Even still, Paul Pressey believes his son would be better for the experience in the NBA. But the question of if, and when, that might happen remains a bit of a mystery.

For a better part of a year, there has been a general belief that Pressey would explore the NBA Draft after this season.

"Agents call and say, 'Hey, what about Phil?' " said Paul Pressey, who occasionally speaks with Haith. "And I say 'Look, Phil right now is trying to win basketball games, trying to get in the tournament. When the season is over with, we'll sit and talk with his coach and my wife and him and evaluate what's best for Phil.' "

Phil Pressey dismisses NBA questions in a similar manner, saying his dad rarely gives him specific on-court advice, lest he contradict Haith. But that doesn't mean the family isn't optimistic about Phil's professional future.
"I think he'll be a better pro than a college player because the game is a little more wide-open," Paul Pressey said. "Like in college, you can hold and push and grind and hit each other, where in the pros, you can't put your hands on guys. Speed kills."

Still, there's little doubt that if Pressey — who is currently projected to be no better than a second-round pick by ESPN.com draft analyst Chad Ford — wants to make his dream come true, the time to start being a "make the right play 99 times out of 100" guy is now.

"Phil Pressey should be and could be projected (to be) a first-round pick," Fuller said. "That's where he came out of last year. … I've talked to different people in the basketball business, and he has to have a really strong finish. The most important thing Phil can do is show people he knows the right play to make and help the team win ballgames."

Laurence Bowers is a fifth-year senior, a co-captain along with Pressey. With his amiable demeanor, efficient jumper and heartwarming story — he overcame an ACL injury last season — one could argue that if any Missouri player deserves to take a big shot, it's Bowers.

Bowers, however, says he still trusts Pressey "100 percent."

"Obviously, Phil is a great player — he's one of the guys you want to have the ball at the end of the game," Bowers said. "I think Phil, you know, he tries to … make it happen instantly, as opposed to us getting what coach drew up. There's been times where it's hurt us.

"…There's a sense of urgency now, because if we lose, we're done. Now that it's tournament time, every possession — every possession — is so crucial … and I think Phil, as a veteran guy that's been around, he knows that."

Bowers isn't the only Tiger who feels this way. When asked Monday if there is any frustration with Pressey's late-game shot selection, both Bell and Ross echoed similar feelings.

"You know, this is Phil's team," Bell said. "He's the captain."

They are willing to help, though. Ross noted that he and his teammates are ready to take a big shot if given the opportunity. But the Tigers trust that when the time comes, their best player will come through when it matters.

"You live and you learn," Pressey said. "The thing about it is, I know coach Haith has faith in me, so he gives me all the confidence I need. I know when the time comes, I'm going to be confident enough to make that shot or make the right pass. I don't lose any confidence at all."

STL Post-Dispatch: Bowers Much More Than a Basketball Player (3/15)
By Joe Strauss

When Laurence Bowers uses those words, he isn't lamenting the present. Not even close. He is merely recognizing a career that has lasted five occasionally hurtful, frequently rewarding seasons at Missouri. His time connects two coaching regimes and made him a witness to a continent of mountains, valleys and rivers. Only The Columns have endured longer in Columbia.

Bowers has been an extra on a Final Eight team and an invested bystander to the club that cut down the nets last March after winning the program's final Big 12 tournament.

Bowers turns 23 next month. The team's only senior to have spent his entire career at Mizzou, he will leave campus with an undergraduate degree in sociology and a masters in health, education & promotion.

The Tennessee native has developed from a slender freshman who averaged fewer than seven minutes and barely three points for Mike Anderson's 2008-09 Tigers into the best player on Frank Haith's inscrutable bunch who entered Thursday's second-round tilt against Texas A&M as the SEC tournament's No. 6 seed.

"There's a sense of urgency to it," Bowers says. He's invested so much in this season and this weekend that Bowers lets slip, "If I lose, my college career is over."

Overmatched inside, the Aggies hardly threatened Mizzou with early eviction. The Tigers, motivated rather than indifferent on defense, won 62-50 after holding A&M to 23 percent shooting in the first half. Early foul trouble befell Aggies forward Ray Turner, allowing the Tigers a 14-2 scoring edge in the paint first half. The Tigers went on a 10-0 spree that gave them a 26-13 lead.

Mizzou's overall dominance was such that it wasn't overly reliant on Bowers, who received only nine first-half minutes due to two early fouls. However, a quick trey and two free throws helped Mizzou to a 15-point lead with 11 minutes left in the game.

Thursday's question wasn't how Mizzou so easily dismissed its harried opponent but how A&M beat the Tigers this season at College Station. In reality, Missouri is a lock to reach the NCAA Tournament, where Bowers is among those who make them a dangerous team. Missouri arguably underachieved this season because of problems on the road. But they won't have to play a true road game again. The Tigers possess an enigmatic all-conference point guard, Phil Pressey. Or better said, Pressey often possesses them. Senior transfer Alex Oriakhi, who roamed unimpeded on the block Thursday, played for a national championship team at Connecticut.

Bowers, however, is the adult in the room. No one has invested more to be here.

"You go through slumps then you start playing well. That's where I see us," Bowers says. "The biggest thing is not trying to prove anything. I've already proved what I need to prove to myself. My only thought is doing what I can to help us win. This isn't about me."

Last season was supposed to be Bowers' year until he ruptured the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee stretching for an errant pass during a pick-up game in October. The day after surgery Bowers kept a commitment to read to children at a Columbia library.

He attended all of his team's games, home and away, the 30 wins and the five losses.
Rather than sulk, he used his extra year to further a reputation that includes two Big 12 all-academic mentions.

Bowers makes clear that he has used basketball rather be used by it. He speaks as someone who anticipates a beginning more than an end following March Madness.

"You don't want to be a one-dimensional guy," insists Bowers, now grown to 6-foot-8 and more than 230 pounds. "Everyone sees Laurence Bowers and they immediately think, 'He's a basketball player.' You want to be known for something else. Graduating with a masters is a bigger step. I really fought the thought of just being a basketball player. I want to be seen as a human being able to make a difference with other people."

Within the big picture Bowers knows well the next several weeks represent a closing window. He lost five conference games in January to a right knee strain. The Tigers were 3-2 in his absence, absorbing 15- and 31-point road beatings at Mississippi and Florida. Mizzou has lost five excruciating games since Bowers' return — four times by a field goal and the fifth in overtime. The Tigers also avenged the distorted losses against Ole Miss and Florida.

Bowers thinks about this season's meander through conference play and wonders aloud, "We had a team that could do great things."

In another moment, Bowers unflinchingly speaks of this team and the term "national championship" in the same sentence.

"This team has matured a lot," he says of a group that includes only one player, Pressey, who played meaningful minutes last season.

"When we started out there was no secret we were talented but we weren't clicking as one. No one cares about individual accolades. Yes, we lost on the road. But I felt we played a lot better on the road late. We've got a lot of confidence and the pieces. I think we're going to make a run."

For the Tigers to make noise this month, Bowers must be the player analysts projected as a possible All-American early this season. His 14.8 points and 6.3 rebounds represent only the visible part of the iceberg.

Haith insisted in November that the offense run through Bowers.

At times the message appeared to get lost, but not now. There is more to featuring Bowers than sentiment. It is necessity.

This mid-season's strain briefly left Bowers tentative, evidenced by 7.7 points per game on 40.4 percent shooting in his first six games back. In his last six regular season games Bowers averaged 17.2 points while shooting 60.3 percent from the field.

He punctuated Senior Night with 24 points against Arkansas and a season-most 11 rebounds in 26 minutes.

Admits Bowers, a Memphis native this weekend playing two hours away down I-40: "I was obviously a little timid when I came off the injury. That's the way it is until you find your groove and get your rhythm back. I went through stretches where I wasn't playing at my highest level. As the season progressed with the coaches in my ear, I progressed. Now I'm playing at a high level. We've got to win."
