LETTERS RECEIVED BY THE OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS
1824-80

On the 962 rolls of this microfilm publication is reproduced the greater part of the correspondence received by the central office of the Bureau of Indian Affairs during the years 1824 through 1880. The correspondence not included consists of letters and documents organized by the Bureau into various special series, which are discussed in more detail below.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs was established within the War Department on March 11, 1824, by order of Secretary of War John C. Calhoun (H. Doc. 146, 1st sess., 19th Cong., p. 6).

From 1789 until 1824 the administration of Indian Affairs had been under the direct supervision of the Secretary of War with the exception of the Government-operated system of factories for trade with the Indians. From 1806 to 1822, the year of its abolition, this system was administered by a Superintendent of Indian Trade who was responsible to the Secretary of War. Six volumes of letters relating to Indian Affairs sent by the Secretary of War, 1800-24, have been reproduced as Microfilm Publication 15. Letters sent by the Superintendent of Indian Trade from 1807 to 1822, also recorded in six volumes, with a seventh volume covering the office in liquidation after 1822, are reproduced as Microfilm Publication 16. The incoming letters of the Secretary of War relating to Indian affairs from 1800 to 1824 are divided into three series. Some of the letters were retained in the Secretary's Office and are to be found interfiled with other incoming letters in either the registered series reproduced in Microfilm Publication 221 or the unregistered series reproduced in Microfilm Publication 222. A third series was made up of files inherited by the Bureau from the Secretary of War or borrowed from him and not returned. This series has been reproduced in Microfilm Publication 271. Records of the Secretary's Office dated earlier than November 8, 1800, were lost in a fire of that date.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs operated informally within the War Department from 1824 until 1832. In 1832 Congress authorized the appointment of a Commissioner of Indian Affairs to direct and manage, under the direction of the Secretary of War, all matters arising out of relations with the Indians (4 Stat. 564). In 1849 the Office of Indian Affairs, as the Commissioner's office was then generally designated, was transferred from the War Department to the new Department of the Interior (9 Stat. 395) where it remains. The name "Bureau of Indian Affairs" was not formally adopted until 1947.

Until 1846 there were no formal subdivisions of the central office of the Bureau. In that year four divisions, all of which remained in existence beyond 1880, were established. The names applied to these divisions varied, but they were most commonly known as "Land," "Civilization," "Finance," and "Files and Records." In 1873 the Medical and Educational Division assumed some of the duties of the Civilization Division; and in 1876 the Accounts Division was established.

For research in the records reproduced on this microfilm, understanding the field organization of the Bureau is far more useful than knowing the organization of the central office in Washington. There were two principal types of field jurisdictions: superintendencies and agencies. Superintendents had general responsibility for Indian affairs in a geographic area, usually a territory, but often a larger area. Their duties included supervising relations among the several Indian tribes in their jurisdiction and between tribes and people having business with them, and supervising the conduct and the accounts of agents responsible to them. Agents were immediately responsible for the affairs of one tribe or more. Until after 1870 most agents were responsible to a superintendent, but some reported directly to the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington. In the earlier years agents were virtually diplomatic representatives of the United States. They attempted to preserve or restore peace and often to induce the Indians to cede their land and move to areas less threatened by white encroachment. They also distributed money and goods as required by treaties and carried out other provisions of treaties with the Indians. Gradually, as the Indians were confined on reservations, the agents became more concerned with educating and civilizing them.

The system of superintendencies and agencies was already well established by 1824. It was a common practice for the Governor of a Territory to serve ex officio as Superintendent of Indian Affairs, particularly in newly organized Territories. A full-time superintendent was appointed for superintendencies located in unorganized territory or in States and in those places where the duties of a superintendent were particularly arduous. Superintendents and agents were appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The number of superintendencies and agencies was restricted by Congress. Particularly significant was an act of June 30, 1834 (4 Stat. 735), which specifically authorized certain superintendencies and agencies. The President was permitted to discontinue or to transfer agencies but was given no authority to establish additional agencies. An act of February 27, 1851, fixed the number of agencies, taking into account the greatly expanded area of the country after the Mexican War and the settlement with Great Britain of the Oregon boundary (9 Stat. 574).

The restrictions on the number of agencies were, in a sense, evaded by establishing subagencies, which could be done without congressional approval when conditions demanded. Before 1834 subagents were normally assistants to a full agent. Later most subagents became in effect regular agents, although usually assigned to less important agencies and receiving less salary. Additional agencies were also established by the creation of "special agencies." Often special agents were appointed to carry out some special assignment; but in other cases they were simply regular agents appointed in addition to the authorized quota. Superintendents, particularly those in newly organized areas, often appointed special and acting agents of various kinds, sometimes without official authority to do so.

The Bureau employed other kinds of agents in addition to those in charge of agencies. Purchasing and disbursing agents were concerned respectively with obtaining goods and with distributing either goods or money to the Indians. Emigration agents assisted in the removal of Indians from one area to another. Enrolling agents were appointed to prepare rolls of the Indians for annuity disbursements, land allotments, or other purposes. There were also treaty commissioners, inspectors, and special agents for specific missions (such as the investigation of the conduct of regular field employees or the settlement of claims).

Superintendents and agents in newly established jurisdictions were allowed a good deal of latitude. For instance the assignment of agents was often left to the discretion of the superintendent, and agents were permitted to select sites for agency headquarters, subject to approval. Often agents did not have any permanent headquarters and spent much of their time traveling. Gradually, as the Indians were settled on reservations, the agencies became more fixed in location, better communications were established, and the superintendents and agents were allowed less independence of action. In 1869 most of the civilian agents were suspended and replaced by Army officers. The following year most of the Army men were relieved, and civilians again appointed. It was always a common practice, however, to detail Army men to duty with the Indian Service when there were unusual disturbances or when civilian agents were unavailable. During the 1870's religious denominations were allowed to nominate persons to be agents.

Supervision of a number of agencies by one superintendent was discontinued during the 1870's, and by 1878 the last superintendency had been abolished. Thereafter all agents reported directly to the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Washington. Inspectors and special agents, however, were sometimes given some supervisory authority over agents.

Brief histories of the individual jurisdictions and for subject headings are available on request.

To a large extent the records here reproduced consist of communications received from superintendents, agents, and other field officials of the Bureau. These communications relate to the general situation of the Indians, their population, education, health, and medical care, and their agriculture and subsistence. They cover such matters of administrative concern as emigration, land allotments, annuity payments, depredations, claims, complaints, traders, buildings, supplies, employees, and accounts. There are also instructions, requests, decisions, authorizations, and other communications from the Secretary of the Interior and from the Secretary of War (before 1849). Correspondence from the War Department after 1849 consists largely of copies of military reports. The Commissioner of the General Land Office often wrote concerning reservations and matters affecting the public domain. From the Second Auditor and other Treasury officials there is much correspondence concerning accounts and other financial matters. The President, Members of Congress, and other officials made inquiries and transmitted other letters. There are vouchers, accounts, and communications from merchants, manufacturers, shippers, bankers, and other persons and firms having commercial relations with the Bureau. There are complaints, claims, requests, inquiries, and other communications from Indians, attorneys, and private citizens. There are applications for office and many other letters from persons with some interest in Indians or the activities of the Bureau.

Incoming correspondence was controlled by registers. The information concerning a letter that was entered in the register was also usually written on the back of the letter or on a covering sheet to form an "endorsement."

The correspondence is arranged alphabetically by name of jurisdiction or by subject heading. The letters filed under the name of a jurisdiction relate to the affairs of that jurisdiction or to the Indians assigned to it and include letters from other persons besides the agent or superintendent. A letter received from the agent at one agency may be filed under the name of another agency if it is primarily concerned with the affairs of the second agency.

Separate file headings were not established for every agency. In some cases the letters received were filed under the name of the superintendency responsible for the agency. This was the usual practice for the newer superintendencies and agencies in the Far West. For most of the agencies assigned to the older superintendencies such as St. Louis, Michigan, and Western, separate file headings were established. Theoretically in these cases letters relating specifically to an agency were filed under the name of that agency, and the superintendency heading was reserved for letters of more general concern. This distinction was not always possible in practice, however, and letters concerning any agency may be found in either the superintendency file or the agency file.

The name of a superintendency that was the same as that of a State or Territory was often continued in use as a file heading for correspondence relating to all the agencies in the State or Territory after the superintendency itself had been discontinued. In one case, in 1876, a "Nebraska" heading was established, although there was not then nor had there ever been a Nebraska Superintendency.

Records were filed under the names of agencies after they had been discontinued and even before they had been established. Records relating to the settlement of the affairs of Indians who had been moved to the jurisdiction of a new agency often continued to be filed under the name of the discontinued agency. Letters received before 1836 appear to have been filed originally in registry order with no jurisdictional breakdown. They were rearranged in the Bureau about 1910, however, by carrying the 1836 headings backward whether or not those headings reflected the actual field organization of the Bureau. Thus records relating to Indians who were later assigned to an agency were filed under the name of that agency although dated before the agency itself had been established.

In a very few cases the file heading was a tribal designation rather than the name of an agency. Most of the "artificial jurisdiction" files set up in 1910 have been dismantled and the records interfiled with those for the jurisdictions to which they actually belong. Such artificial subheadings as "Treaty," "Exploration," and "Claim" have also been eliminated in an effort to restore the original headings. The Bureau, however, filed separately many letters relating to Indian emigration and to land reserves. For certain jurisdictions, therefore, there are separate files designated "Emigration" and "Reserves," which follow the other correspondence. Not all letters relating to these subjects were filed separately, so it is also necessary to consult the main body of correspondence relating to a jurisdiction for full coverage of such subjects. An index giving the names of the jurisdictions, the dates of their operation, and the file headings under which the letters appear follows an index to tribal names that gives the jurisdictions under which letters concerning a particular tribe are filed.

In addition to the headings for jurisdictions there are five subject headings: "Annuity Goods," "Centennial," "Schools," "Stocks," and "Miscellaneous." Annuity goods, such as blankets, clothing, and agricultural equipment were furnished to the Indians in accordance with the terms of treaties; and their procurement and transportation could not be related to specific jurisdictions. "Centennial" relates to Indian exhibits at the U.S. International Exhibition at Philadelphia and has only a brief chronological span. "Stocks" relates to securities of various types and to funds in which Indian monies were held in trust. Much additional information relating to the first four of these subjects may be found in the correspondence relating to the individual jurisdictions. In the "Miscellaneous" category are letters relating to a multitude of subjects, but to no special jurisdiction, such as the service as a whole, general policy in the purchases of goods, appointments, the administration of the central office, medals for Indian chiefs, persons captured by the Indians, Indians in places where the Bureau had no field representatives or over whom the Federal Government had no jurisdiction, and many matters affecting several jurisdictions. In theory, at least, letters filed under "Miscellaneous" could not appropriately be placed in any one other category. The "Miscellaneous" category is not one to be ignored as containing only odds and ends; in it are documents that are of very great importance because of their concern with policy and their broad application.

Under each heading the letters are arranged by year and thereunder alphabetically by initial letter of surname or official position of the writer. Correspondence from certain officials was registered under letters indicating their offices. Letters from the Secretary of the Interior, for example, were registered under "I", from the Secretary of War under "W" or "S", from the President under "P", and from the Second Auditor under "A" or "S". Early correspondence from these officials was often registered under their surnames. Correspondence from agents and superintendents was usually registered under the name of the individual rather than the name of the jurisdiction. The major exception is correspondence from Territorial Governors serving as ex officio superintendents, which was usually registered according to the name of the Territory. Letters from the Governor of Wisconsin Territory, for example, were registered under "W". For a very brief period (April to December, 1877) correspondence from agents and superintendents was registered according to the name of the jurisdiction. Letters from Indian groups were usually registered under the initial letter of the name of the tribe, and letters from business firms under a letter indicating the name of the company. The letters "I" and "J" are combined.

Communications under each letter of the alphabet are arranged by date of letter until 1836. After 1836, when the use of file numbers began, they are arranged by the file numbers that were assigned to letters in order as they were registered. Each alphabetical section of the register was given its own series of file numbers. Thus, the first letter received from a person whose surname began with "A" was designated "A1", the second "A2", etc. There was no regard for the jurisdictions involved when these numbers were assigned. When the letters were coded for filing, "A1" may have been designated for filing under "St. Louis" and "A2" under "Winnebago." The period during which a series of numbers was continued in use varied. Sometimes several years went by before new series beginning with "1" were started for each letter of the alphabet. In 1859, 1872, and 1873, because the numbers were started over in the middle of the year, there are two sets of numbers and, in 1873, some duplicate numbers. An attempt has been made to arrange the records for these years with the earlier series of numbers for each letter of the alphabet ahead of the later set; that is, to keep them in the same order in which they were registered. Since letters were registered when they were received, a letter written at the end of one year may have been registered and filed with the correspondence for the following year.

There are among the records some letters that were not registered, and many letters that were registered are no longer with the records. Some of the letters removed are noted in the registers, and cross-references to some are to be found in the files, but for many there is no indication of their disposition. Beginning in 1834 the referral of letters outside of the Bureau was usually noted in the register.

Some letters removed from the main series of letters received, the subject of this microcopy, were filed with various special series of records established in the Bureau. These include the Special Files (reproduced in Microcopy 574), each file relating to some particular subject that usually involved an investigation; Special Cases, mainly concerned with disputes over land; Ratified Treaty File; Unratified Treaty File; Executive Order File; Inspectors File; Irregularly Shaped Papers; and papers retained for some special reason in one of the divisions. Some have been placed with related papers in later correspondence series. Cross-references were usually, but by no means always, left with the records to indicate these removals and the new location. The cross-references have been microfilmed with the records.

Other letters have been lost or destroyed over the years in different ways. For many years the Bureau sent original documents to the Government Printing Office, and some were either not returned or were destroyed as no longer needed. This is especially true of annual reports received from superintendents and agents and regularly printed as supplements to the Commissioners' annual reports. Original papers were often sent to congressional committees from which they were sometimes sent to the Government Printing Office for printing as parts of printed congressional documents. Very rarely were these originals returned to the Bureau files. Originals instead of copies were often sent to the Courts when requested and presumably were filed with their case records. One notable series of such case records, which contains many original documents of interest, is the Indian Depredation series among the records of the U.S. Court of Claims.

Before the National Archives was established, the Bureau, finding in its files letters signed by famous statesmen such as Andrew Jackson or Samuel Houston would sometimes extract the letters and send them to the Library of Congress for preservation, sometimes leaving in the file a record of the transfer and sometimes not. Other letters have in years long past found their way through unknown channels into private possession. Some turn up occasionally in catalogs of autograph sales and some, fortunately, have now passed into the manuscript collections of historical and research libraries. Often the user of this film will not be aware of missing items unless he carefully checks against the registers of letters received. And where the missing items were enclosures, they were not registered at all.

Maps enclosed with letters were usually, because of their size and special use, removed from these files and maintained separately. These maps are now kept separate in the National Archives. They are described in National Archives, Special List 13, List of Cartographic Records of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Maps mentioned in letters as enclosures but not found with the letters are likely to be among these separated records. Those maps that are still with the correspondence have been microfilmed.

The records have been microfilmed in the order established by the agency, which is the order in which they are kept in the National Archives. Usually the endorsement of a letter is filmed before the letter itself. Enclosures are next filmed chronologically, numerically, or in some other simple order. Enclosures may or may not have file numbers. Some have several file numbers including those of other agencies that may have handled them. Ordinarily everything appearing between one endorsement and the next is regarded as part of the same document.

The "Registers of Letters Received," which constitute an alphabetical and chronological control of the letters themselves, have also been microfilmed, as Microfilm Publication 18. Transcripts of the outgoing letters of the Bureau, which complement the incoming letters, are in bound volumes with indexes of addressees. The letters were recorded in a single chronological series until 1869, after which they were recorded under broad subjects, such as land and finance. These letterbooks have been microfilmed as Microfilm Publication 21. The letters received during the period 1881-1907 are arranged chronologically without any jurisdictional breakdown. They are available for use in the National Archives.

A careful distinction must be made between records of the central office of the Bureau and records of the various field offices. The letters reproduced in this microfilm publication are all records that were received and maintained in Washington. Each superintendency usually maintained comparable series of records, which to some extent duplicate the central office records.

Therefore, when a particular letter that passed between the central office and a field office is missing from the records of either, a copy of it may be among the records of the other office.

Some of the records of the Bureau's field offices for the years 1824-80 are now in the National Archives. Others are in the several regional Federal Records Centers. Still others are scattered in various manuscript depositories throughout the country. Some of the records of field offices that are now in the National Archives are available in other microfilm publications-- Cherokee Agency in Tennessee, 1801-35 (Microcopy 208); Michigan Superintendency, 1814-51 (Microcopy 1); Oregon Superintendency, 1848-73 (Microcopy 2); and Washington Superintendency, 1853-74 (Microcopy 5).

The records reproduced in the present microfilm publication and the other series of records in the National Archives mentioned above are part of Record Group 75, Records of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. There are related records in Record Group 107, Records of the Office of the Secretary of War, and Record Group 48, Records of the Office of the Secretary of the Interior.

TRIBAL INDEX TO FILES

This index lists the tribes and more important bands of Indians under the supervision of agencies and superintendencies during the years 1824-80, with the jurisdictional headings under which correspondence concerning them is filed. For letters relating to a particular tribe, the use of this index and of the Contents pages will show the particular rolls of microfilm on which such letters have been reproduced. No attempt has been made to establish the exact dates when each tribe was under a jurisdiction, but dates for a definite period of assignment are given.

File headings for agencies with primary responsibility for a tribe are listed first and are followed by those for agencies with responsibility for some part of the tribe and for superintendencies having supervisory control over the responsible agencies. For Indians assigned to agencies for which there is no separate correspondence only the names of superintendencies are given.

This index does not list every jurisdiction having contact with members of a tribe but only jurisdictions with actual administrative responsibility. Currently accepted spellings of tribal names are used, with cross-references for commonly used contemporary spellings.

JURISDICTIONAL INDEX TO FILES

The following index lists for the period 1824-80 the names, the dates of operation of Indian superintendencies and agencies, and the file headings under which correspondence concerning them may be found. As the letters received are arranged under the various file headings (or jurisdictions) given below, this index enables the user to determine which rolls of the microcopy contain the letters in which he is interested. For example, letters relating to the Blackfeet Agency for the period 1855-69 are on Roll 30, but for the years 1869-80 they are on Rolls 489-518 with other letters relating to the Montana Superintendency. If no file heading is given, one can go directly to the Contents pages for the name of the jurisdiction; e.g., letters relating to the Apalachicola Subagency, 1826-34, are among those on Roll 2. The years of operation of a jurisdiction do not necessarily coincide with the years covered by the file heading of the same name.

Cross-references indicate predecessor and successor agencies and superintendencies as well as other headings under which letters relating to one agency may have been filed.

It has been impossible to include the name of every subagency and special agency. Probably the most significant omissions are the agencies and subagencies established during the early years of a superintendency, when agents were moved about without permanent assignments to a particular tribe or locality. For correspondence concerning such agencies see the superintendency headings.
