

Use Adjectives and Adverbs in Creative Writing - 2022 Guide

I Know Nothing about Adjectives...

If you think you don't know what adjectives are, chances are that you have been using them all over the place without realizing it! Adjectives come in handy when an essay writer needs to add more qualities to the nouns they use. Without adjectives, all the writing in the world would indeed be dull and bland. Adjectives tell us more about our nouns and since nouns are the subjects and objects in any given sentence, adjectives can make a sentence come to life.

What if I don't Use Adjectives?

One can only imagine the consequences of not knowing how to use adjectives. If I were to write an essay or a story where I could not tell the reader more about the subjects and objects in my sentences, it would be quite unappealing. For instance, saying something like "She decided to make a choice" may be entirely different than stating "She decided to make a daring choice". Or "an inevitable choice". Or perhaps "an unexpected choice".

Apt Usage

The above phrases are examples in favor of adjectives. Adjectives can add more complexity to a sentence. One could make a choice but the action and the choice both could become much more interesting if the choice has an adjective like "daring", "inevitable", or "unexpected" tagged along. The power of adjectives makes them so appealing that if I have to write my paper, I could amateurishly decide to sprinkle the entire piece with adjectives. I could say things like "it was a dark night" or "the day was bright". I could also go a little overboard and state "I was attacked by a large group of visitors who wanted to look at my paintings". As much as I would love for my paintings to get viewed, the sentence does not sound quite right. This demonstrates an extremely important rule of writing.

The Golden Rule

Any word or phrase must only be used if it is needed in a sentence. Try to follow the golden rule: try to read what you have written. If the sentence could have been the same without a word, that word is obviously not needed. This is something every essay writer needs to bear in mind. The trick does not lie in using as many impressive words as you can but using the apt words. These should be the words without which a sentence simply would not have been the same. Nights are self-explanatory. I am sure no one has ever had a night that is NOT dark...

Similarly, days are inevitably bright. When I am describing "a large group of people", it would be better to not use the adjective, "large" and simply choose to describe the group of people as a "throng". Using appropriate words that make your writing concise needs to be your primary goal while writing academically or non-academically.

Degrees of Adjectives

Adjectives have more to them than meets the eye. You can choose to employ degrees of adjectives while describing your nouns. These degrees of adjectives can turn "beautiful" into "more beautiful" (comparative) or "most beautiful" (superlatives). Remember: superlatives are always preceded by the article, "the". Read the following sentences and see for yourself how the correct usage of an adjective and then usage of the suitable degree can alter the writing to create more magic!

I heard music.

I heard enchanting music.

I heard the most enchanting music I have heard in a long time.

Also,

"I was bewildered" may be less of a meaningful sentence than

"I was more bewildered than I had been before".

It is about "Where" You Use Them...

Adjectives are not about the kind of words you use but where you use them. Even words that look like nouns can become adjectives when we say things like "I was surprised by her cold demeanor". Here, "cold" and "demeanor" are nouns but what "cold" is doing is acting as an adjective. It is playing the role of a word that tells you something about the subject, "demeanor". If I ask you, "How was her demeanor", you would answer by stating that it was "cold". Essentially, all adjectives are answers to questions like "how" or "how many" about their subjects. When I say, "I own no more than five pens", the word "five" plays the same role as the word "cold" in the former example. It tells you about my pens.

There are so many options adjectives can open up for you as you write. Understanding adjectives may be your key to becoming as good as any other professional writer out there. Try to increase your vocabulary of adjectives as much as you can. Go ahead and learn as many words as you can to explain more about the nouns you use in your sentences. The repertoire of words will only make you better and better!

If All is to no Avail...

If you still feel like you have not got the hang of adjectives and you have that terribly bothersome essay waiting to be written, you can always get yourself some help! Contact a quality essay writing service to get access to expert assistance. You will get all your sentences adorned with all the suitable adjectives in the dictionary only if you choose the right services. Make sure you make the most "informed" choice, a "favorable" choice, or the most "productive" choice for your essay. Online writing services can help you write the best essays within those pesky deadlines! What could be better than seeking the right kind of assistance? After all, nothing is more important than being able to present the best work.

Useful Resources:

Can Your Essay Writing Service Incorporate Last Minute Requirements?

How to Write an Informative Essay | Step-by-Step Best Guide

Will Your Writer Follow My Instructions to Write My Paper? Read!

Argumentative Essay Outline - A Complete Format & Template

Original Essays for Sale Written by Experts

Is It Worth to Hire an Essay Writer Online?