

13 Gateways to the Soul

Alignment & Dispersal Valves

Nestled into the inner edge of the soul layer between the active movement of the swirling individuated currents and the etheric layer are 13 alignment valves and 13 dispersal valves. There are two for each of the 13 chakras. The alignment valves are located at the front of the bio layer, and the dispersal valves are positioned at the back.

The valves are like membranes that filter out any debris or toxicity that might be attached to universal Source energies or to the individuated swirling currents. They open and close very rapidly to allow the incoming energies to enter and move into the correct location. Each set of Alignment and Dispersal Valves have three segments, one for each of the blue, red and golden-yellow currents. They line up to coordinate with the alignment of the core, blue on your right side, golden-yellow on the left and red always in the middle.

Alignment and dispersal valves are usually located across from each other in the soul layer and they contain within the rims of the valves at the bases of the petals (see illustration of the Alignment Valve) but occasionally a valve will drop or rise demonstrating a stress response.

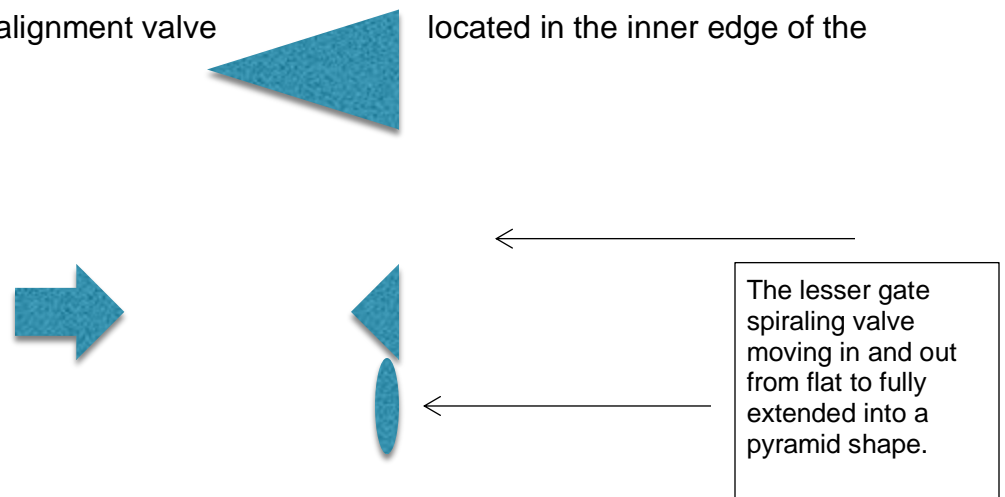

Soul Pathway

Soul pathways are formed out of the swirling individual streams of the soul layer into the triple-current streams that enter at the anterior alignment valves. The incoming triple-current stream formed at the alignment valve is generic and does not yet have an identity related to a particular chakra stream. It remains generic energy until it gets close to the core and enters the sanctuary of the major chakra to be charged. All soul pathways are the same until they enter the chakra.

The Gateways

Lesser gates are the point of entry and exit of the chakra streams into and out of the chakras. The Osmotic Barriers are the entry and exit points into the corridor for the pure intentionality informed energies that are destined to cool the core informed energies ending in receptivity. Greater gates are the entry and exit points of the triple-current stream into and out of the core. The greater and lesser gates were discovered and named by an early SAEM practitioner, Glenn Hartelius in 2004.

There are 22 gates into and out of every chakra mostly in groups of three. The first three occur inside the alignment valve located in the inner edge of the soul layer.

The next gate is the anterior lesser gate located between the end of the united incoming soul pathway and the eleven-segment form of the chakra. Each small gate opens and closes like a spiraling cone-shaped valve pumping in and out. Each incoming current has its own segment of the lesser anterior gate; function, purpose and wisdom all lead their spiraling current into its own node of your intentionality chamber.

At this point the currents swirl and increase in speed and intensity in the intentionality nodes. When they reach a critical mass the function and wisdom nodes each split in half and send about half of the energy of each into the osmotic barrier of the two corridors.

The other 50% of the energy of the function and wisdom nodes continue on through their anterior greater gates in the core sheath. The purpose current spins in its node and as it meets a critical mass it is released through the purpose anterior greater gate.

The greater gateways look like an empty opening surrounded at the edges of it by a thick golden glow of harmonizing blend. The energies surge into the core at the anterior where they are informed and educated before being thrust out through the anterior greater gates entering the core where they are informed. But what happens before the energies are ready to enter the core? They reach critical mass, which actually means as soon as the energy has spun fast enough to release earlier attachment to all prior use and has now simply become pure intention in function, purpose and wisdom for a specific chakra.

When all the chakra energies arrive in receptivity through the posterior osmotic barriers and the posterior greater gate they blend together in their respective receptivity nodes.

Now the function node is cooled by the uninformed energies that have passed through the function corridor and remained essentially unchanged from their original intentionality infused state. The wisdom node is doing the same thing and being cooled by the uninformed energies that have gone through the wisdom corridor and also remained unchanged from the original intentionality-infused state.

The two currents of energy mix and blend in the receptivity node of function and wisdom. All of these currents come out of the core somewhat disoriented. They have experienced a push from the inspiration as the energies hit the core and then the explosion as energies leave the core and hit receptivity.

The purpose current is a slightly different situation because it is not cooled and blended by intentionality currents. It acts as the leader or the arrow that drives the exit from the receptivity node. But before any of these energies are ready to exit they have to slow their spin in the receptivity node where they cool down after the intense educational experience at the core. The purpose current does not experience a cooling down and in fact must stay “hot” to actually drive the entire refocused and “informed” chakra stream as each node releases its energies through the posterior lesser gates into your outgoing chakra stream.

The chakra stream is now matured and ripened to drive your message in the form of function, purpose, and wisdom currents of the particular chakra out through the rear of the structure toward the posterior lesser gate valves that work exactly like the anterior valves.

Finally the informed and focused chakra stream pushes into the inner edge of the soul layer and the posterior dispersal valves. As each valve disperses the single currents out through the chakra stream which is once again disassembled, and released as an individuated current in the soul layer. These “informed” currents give dispatches from the 13 chakras into the soul layer where they share their deeper wisdom, function, and purpose with the entire HES.

There are a total of 286 gates in the Blended Energies System, 22 for each of the 13 chakras. The anterior and posterior greater gates of each chakra are the ones we will be working with specifically. It is their relationship with the mystery at the core that leads you to your soul.