This study evaluated the effect of the positive allosteric modulator of the D4 dopamine receptor, mavoglurant, on sustained attention in people with schizophrenia. We assessed the effects of two doses of mavoglurant (0 and 100 mg) and placebo in 40 participants with schizophrenia (20 in each treatment arm), who underwent a continuous performance task and a distractibility task while receiving a single dose of each treatment. The effects of both doses of mavoglurant on the sustained attention indices were significantly greater than those of placebo, whereas the effects of the lower dose of mavoglurant were not significantly different from those of placebo. The effects of the higher dose of mavoglurant were significantly greater than those of the lower dose. The positive allosteric modulator of the D4 dopamine receptor, mavoglurant, was associated with improved sustained attention in people with schizophrenia.{ "page": 0, "page_size": 100, "search_strategy": "city_fulltext_search", "search_strategy_params": { "text": { "filter": [{ "term": { "truncated_body": "plaese sukkess tafat" } }], "order_by": [{ "date_unix": {
