

Jenny Varrichio, PMP. Jenny is a Learning Performance Consultant with United Healthcare with a Masters of the Arts in Rhetoric and Writing Studies, a PMP certification, and a certification in change management. She is a doctoral candidate at Capella University in Education with a specialization in Instructional Design and has 11 years of progressive success in stewarding and consulting instructional design projects and learning interventions in the corporate world.

As a learning performance consultant, she remotely advances performance improvement initiatives using needs analysis, consulting with corporate leadership, building effective project teams and maintaining mission and goal alignment to promote success in various initiatives. As a consultant and instructional designer in the healthcare industry she created over 100 eLearning modules that were delivered to over 3,000 learners . Most notably, Jenny's expertise was sought by New York University's Stern School of Business (a top 10 MBA program) to transition their networking and resume building MBA curriculum to a remote learning solution. Jenny provided instructional design consultation and learning modules on to NYU and permanently transformed the MBA experience of 5,000 incoming students yearly.

Prior to her experience in healthcare and consulting Jenny honed her Instructional design skills in the Tech and Government sectors. She worked as a Senior Instructional Designer at Nortek Security and Control designing and developing online training materials and advertising materials for a home automation and security device manufacturer. She also was as an instructional designer at iDrive Safely, an online traffic school which focused on teaching deficient drivers to improve their safe practices through an online immersive experience.