Genesis (1-11) and (12-50) Summary:

In the first book of the Torah, Genesis, we see God create a good and perfect world. God created humanity to act as his representatives on earth. But humanity had other ideas and chose to define what was good and evil for themselves. After this decision, things go bad for humans on earth – so bad that God eventually chooses to destroy them with a great flood and start over.

This story of Genesis is the beginning chapter of God's mission to rescue and restore his world. To carry out this plan, God raises up Abraham and promises him that, through his descendants, all of the nations of the world will be blessed. Despite Abraham and his descendants' many failings, God continues to use them to deliver his promise.
