High Towers and its companion, The Majestic, represent some of the best Art Deco apartment houses in the city, with a successful combination of architects and builder known for harmonious blending of form and stylistic details. These buildings seem to soar within Washington's height limit as they are made to seem taller by stacked bays with ziggurats breaking through the cornice line. Everything says “skyscraper.” And each has a wonderful entrance, which was actually used four times by the Cafritz Company in Washington. The stainless steel doors are also found on several apartment buildings in New York.
