

BIGGEST RISKS FOR LONE WORKERS

Dangerous Falls

A fall can turn fatal if help is not dispatched immediately. If the worker is knocked out or concussed, they won't be able to call for help.

Health Emergencies

Risks facing lone workers include on the job health emergencies such as heart attacks or strokes are not uncommon for employees working in industrial environments. And, they are often increased in high stress, physically demanding environments.

Workplace Violence

Workplace violence has become an increasingly important safety and security issue for many organizations. According to the National Safety Council, Every year, 2 million American workers report having been victims of workplace violence.

Fires and Explosions

In the event of a fire, or explosion in a remote location, how would a lone worker be able to handle it? The need to dispatch safety is vital to save lives and mitigate damage.

