

Rick Voyles, Ph.D. is CEO of Center for Dispute Solutions, as well as a published author, business coach and entrepreneur. His publications include, "Understanding Conflict: What are we fighting for?" and "The Understanding Trap: How attempts to correct misunderstandings can escalate conflict."

He is co-host of a podcast, "Coparent Dilemmas," where he discusses ways to navigate complex coparenting issues. He co-hosted a TV program, "Conflict, Mediation and You" where he discusses topics in conflict management, as well as mediation techniques. Dr. Voyles is a subject matter expert in the areas of Divorce, Co-parenting, Negotiation, and Conflict Resolution.

With over 25 years of experience, his areas expertise include: Magistrate and small claims court, Divorce and Domestic Relations, Parenting Plans, Co-parenting Conflicts, Elder-care, Special Education, Juvenile, EEOC and workplace disputes, Union-Management disputes, Neighborhood conflicts, Church conflict and Cross-cultural conflict. And as a certified business coach, he helps business owners plan and structure their business so they can work less and make more.

Rick Voyles is the father and stepfather to six strong, independent, successful women and grandfather to three very intelligent grandchildren. He is husband for Janet Fluker, an LPC with specialties in couples counseling, families with addiction and recovering addicts. Rick is a long-time Doctor Who fan. He likes the mountains better than the beach, coffee, movies, reading and does plastic model building as a hobby. His all-time favorite movie is the first Matrix movie and the first Pirates of the Caribbean movie coming in a very close second.