Robert Lee Hodge was born to study the American Civil War. Coming into this world on "Stonewall" Jackson's 143rd birthday and being named for the South's most famous general surely couldn't have been coincidence. By age 4 he was a "Civil War addict". For over 30 years Hodge has turned his passion into a profession. He worked on Civil War productions like ABC's North and South, TNT's Gettysburg and Andersonville. He serves on the board of directors of the Central Virginia Battlefields Trust; an organization that has protected over one thousand acres near Fredericksburg, Virginia. Most recently Hodge was featured on the National Geographic Channel, in Time magazine, and writing on the Civil War for The Washington Post. He continues to work on his films, giving tours of battlefields, writing, and speaking across the country.
