

The specific terms and conditions for membership in the Agricultural Institute of Zambia (AIZ) may vary depending on the institute's policies and membership categories. However, typical terms and conditions for membership for AIZ include:

- Eligibility: Membership is open to agricultural professionals who are trained in the science of agriculture and practicing in the agricultural sector in Zambia. Eligibility criteria include qualifications, experience and level of involvement in agriculture-related activities.
- Application Process: Prospective members are required to complete application forms 1 and 6 and submit along with certified copies of academic qualifications and national registration card and proof of payment of the prescribed fees as in schedules 2 and 3. The application process also involves reviewing and approval by the institute's Registration Board.
- Membership Categories: AIZ offers different membership categories, such as Professional Scientists, Certified Technicians and Crafts persons. Each category may have its own eligibility criteria, benefits, and dues.
- Membership Dues: Members are required to pay membership fees which are paid once off at first registration. In addition, members are required to pay annual subscription and practicing dues or fees to maintain their practicing status. The amount of dues may vary depending on the membership category and the services and benefits provided to members.
- Code of Conduct: Members are required to adhere to a code of conduct or ethical standards established by the institute. This could include principles of professionalism, integrity, and respect for fellow members and the agricultural profession.
- Rights and Privileges: Members are entitled to certain rights and privileges, such as voting in institute elections, attending meetings and events, accessing member-only resources or publications, and participating in institute activities and programs.
- Continuing Education: Members are encouraged or required to participate in continuing education or professional development activities offered by the institute. This could include workshops, seminars, training programs, or conferences related to agriculture.
- Termination of Membership: Membership in AIZ is subject to termination for reasons such as non-payment of dues, violation of the institute's code of conduct, or other breaches of membership terms and conditions.
- Amendment of Terms and Conditions: The institute may reserve the right to amend the terms and conditions of membership, subject to approval by the institute's governing body, the AGM

It's important for prospective members to review the specific terms and conditions of membership provided by the Agricultural Institute of Zambia so that they have a clear understanding of the AIZ Act No.2 of 2017 before applying for membership.
