From the President's Desk

The US Postal Service is in Default and Congress is the FAULT.

With the financial crisis that was placed upon the US Postal Service since 2006, damage control is the game plan of the day. This systematic process brought about by factions that want to destroy universal delivery service to all Americans, not only has taken its toll on the US Postal Service, but it will have a devastating effect on the entire mailing industry. In spite of the damage done, the US Postal Service is adapting to the industry changes and in a very productive manner. The shipping volume has increased 50% in volume and every category other than first class mail is either holding its own or shown increases as well. The real toll is on the employees who are forced to work harder, longer, and with tremendous pressure to produce while receiving less leave and deprived of making scheduled appointments. Manpower shortages due to the deficits caused by bad legislative action are putting stress squarely upon an aging workforce with no lifeline for the future. This stress places a danger to the health and welfare of employees, their families, and even their lives. The attack on the Postal Service and its employees is also attacking Veterans who have served their Nation, as 40% of employees are Veterans. There is an apparent faction in our society that chooses to elevate their position in life while diminishing positions of all others.

The National Convention

in Minneapolis was a great success and outstanding training for the delegates who were able to attend. Unfortunately, Debbie and George McEndree had to leave due to family emergency and the loss of Debbie's mother. Please let's all keep them in our prayers and concerns. All the other delegates enjoyed a passionate convention atmosphere filled with inspirational speakers from the labor movement and from the political side. Our resolution regarding same work different unions was disapproved, but resulted in a Constitutional Amendment to correct the records of members who were denied membership into the NALC prior to abandoning the dual charters at the convention in 1962 for those members who were in the National Alliance. The training was overwhelming, especially in all the classes pertaining to retirement and OWCP. It seems as though everyone is breaking down or looking for a way to retire. The other highlight was the warm reception from the host branch and all the people of Minneapolis...what a great job done by all! The overall theme of the Convention was Stand Up and Fight Back. It is now time to do just that...stand up for our jobs, our benefits and families who rely on us. Time to fight back those who want to privatize and destroy public sector unions and deprive us decent standards of living that we earn and are not given to us. The National Convention Delegates by a large majority voted to endorse President Barack Obama for a second term of office. Fred Rolando stated that "it is better to elect a friend who has miss-stepped than to support an enemy who wants to destroy us." This will be without a doubt a hard fought election with a great deal at stake for the middle class workers who have the most to lose if the current stagnation in politics continues, especially in the House and the Senate. We can only hope for some common sense and compromise in all aspects of our economic dilemma regarding taxes and deficit spending and what's best for America and all her citizens.

The contract negotiations

turn to the Arbitration hearings this month and our Executive Council have been preparing for this from the time our contract expired, and even before. They hired high-powered consultants to gain an edge in the testimony that they will provide to the arbitration panel during those hearings.

We have the right leadership and the right leader for the time we are in and that leader is President Fred Rolando. The question we have to answer is, are we going to have his back and support him the way he fights for all of us? If you don't see the need to be involved to join the e-activist, contribute 5 measly dollars a pay period for your job insurance through COLCPE, then don't expect a miracle because the enemy we stand against has BIG Deep Pockets and wants more out of yours! I am not singing to any choir like I was told at the last union meeting, because we only have about 50 members who support the battle we are all in. Thank you to the member who came into my office the very next day and finally joined up for COLCPE, and wouldn't you know, he was a retiree. Brick by brick we can be strong enough to stand against anybody who disrespects our way of life and what it provides for our families.

Brothers and Sisters, we continue to lose many of our fellow letter carriers and members of our branch. We can cherish their memories and the time we shared and in these days, sometimes more than we actually share with our families, since we are at work more than home. God Bless all of those who have departed, and never let them go without sharing something positive that they left in our lives. Happy Trails until we meet again really does say it all.

Faternally in Unionism and Solidarity,

Around the Horn

Brothers and Sisters, as I was finishing up with this article before the deadline, I realized it was my anniversary. On 9 August 1980, I began my postal career...32 years ago. I bring that up because it is significant to me as I send my condolences to the Chuck Jaudon family. Chuck carried mail at Town 'n Country Station; he was a NALC union brother, and a dear friend. Chuck passed away in early August, about a week before my anniversary, and he will be missed tremendously by his family, friends and coworkers. Chuck began his USPS career in 1979, about eleven months before I began, and I am glad he was around. Chuck was always very helpful and assisted in guiding me throughout my probationary period. Chuck and I, along with deceased brother Bernie Bauman (Hilldale Station) had some fun times as PTFs and we have some great stories for sure. Chuck was a fantastic person; we hung out socially at the beginning of our careers, and he was like a guy you had known your whole life. Over the years when we spoke, we would always reminisce and it always brought us to a laugh. I remember calling Chuck when Brother Bernie passed and we had an awesome conversation just talking about the old days. In that conversation Chuck said something I will never forget, more so now that he has also passed. Chuck said, "It bothers me that Bernie did not get to enjoy his retirement; you work so hard to get there and then you can't enjoy it, that's sad." Chuck was taken from us suddenly and much too soon. I was proud to have called Chuck a friend.

NALC Convention News

Thanks to the membership for sending myself and all the delegates to the 68th Biennial Convention in Minneapolis, Minnesota. So much information was covered, with great speakers, great classes and a president that leaves no doubt he is the man to lead us through turbulent times. National did a wonderful job providing quality classes with mock cases and situations. We covered House Resolutions, Amendments, Social Security, TSP, Contract Negotiations, COLCPE and more. There was much information for the delegates to bring back to the membership.

has a great article regarding the $5.5 billion payment the USPS has defaulted on. There were many articles concerning this topic, I thought you might get the most from this article:

Welcome to the week the United States Postal Service defaults on a major obligation. D-Day is Wednesday, Aug. 1, when the Postal Service is obligated, by statute, to make a $5.5 billion payment, money that is supposed to be put aside to "prefund" health benefits for future retirees. But, with less than $1 billion in the bank, the Postal Service announced on Monday that it would not be making the payment. It has a second payment, for $5.6 billion, due in September. Unless lightning strikes, it won't be making that one either.

On the one hand, there is no doubt that part of the reason the post office is struggling is that its world has changed mightily. Everyone knows the story: the rise of e-mail, online bill paying, and so on, have cut deeply into Americans' use of first class mail, which peaked in 2006. Last year, the Postal Service reported losses of more than $5 billion – even though Congress allowed it to defer its annual prefunding of retiree health benefits. With or without the prefunding, the post office was eventually headed toward a crisis.

On the other hand, that prefunding requirement is an absolute killer. It has cost the post office more than $20 billion since 2007 – a period during which its total losses amounted to $25.3 billion. Without that requirement, the post office would still likely be struggling, but it would have a lot more wiggle room – and a lot more cash. (Its pension obligations are also overfunded by around $11 billion.) Not since the debt crisis has there been such an avoidable fiscal mess.

It is a little startling when you first hear about the prefunding requirement. It seems to make no sense, and, as many have noted, it is something that is demanded of no other company or government agency. So why does it exist? It turns out to be one of those things that only Congress could cook up.

Since the 1970s, the Postal Service has been self-sufficient, generating money by selling stamps and offering services – and not dependent on the taxpayer. It is thus considered off budget. Yet part of its operations – including its health and retiree benefits – have continued to be part of the federal budget, and thus count against the federal deficit.

In 2002, it was discovered that the Postal Service was wildly overpaying its retirement obligations to the tune of $71 billion. Not surprisingly, it soon began advocating for ways to use some of that excess. One bill passed that did almost nothing to solve the problem. Later bills that would have fixed the problem, however, all ran into the same stumbling block: they would have ostensibly added to the deficit. And the Bush administration was adamant that it would veto any bill that wasn't deficit-neutral.

Thus it was that a new fund was established in 2006 – for the prepayment of health benefits for future retirees, with the Postal Service agreeing to pay between $5.5 and $5.8 billion annually. The money simply goes into an escrow account, where it is invested in special issue Treasury securities. Thus does it somehow magically help with the deficit. Also, of course, no sooner did the bill become law than first class mail began to fall off the cliff. The prefunding requirement became a noose around the Postal Service's neck.

Incapable of simply letting the Postal Service go free – imagine what that would do to the deficit! – Congress continues to micromanage it, offering various ways for it to cut costs and raise revenue. The Postal Service, for instance, wants to cut Saturday delivery to save money; a Senate bill passed in April defers that decision for two years. But at least the Senate bill offers some relief from the absurd prefunding of health benefits. It would also return some of the excess retirement funding.

The postal reform bill that has emerged from the Republican-led House of Representatives, however, does no such thing. Representative Darrell Issa, the chairman of the committee that oversees the Postal Service, talks fiercely about the need to lower labor costs, while describing the Senate bill as a “bailout.” What he is doing, of course, is using the fact that the Postal Service is going broke to impose a slash-and-burn approach – while ignoring the central reason the post office is running out of money: Congress itself. Meanwhile, the bill that emerged from Issa's committee has never been brought to a vote on the House floor. Default notwithstanding, there won't be a vote anytime soon. After all, the Congressional recess is right around the corner.

The post office insists that the default will not affect its ability to deliver the mail. Maybe not now. But several postal experts told me that at the rate things are going, it will be out of money sometime next year. Maybe then Congress will start taking seriously the crisis it created.
