Bounce Back

Intervention for Elementary School Children Exposed to Stressful Events

Bounce Back is an intervention for elementary school children exposed to stressful and traumatic events developed by Dr. Audra Langley, PhD, from the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA) and associates. The goal of the intervention program is to help teach participants ways of coping with and recovering from traumatic experiences. It includes 10 skill-building group sessions for participants. The intervention program is based on Cognitive Behavioral Intervention for Trauma in Schools (CBITS) which has been shown to help middle school students recover after stressful events. The initial evaluation in multi-cultural elementary schools shows that students participating in the program showed significant reductions in anxiety and post-traumatic stress symptoms compared to those who did not participate.

Group Sessions

- ❖ 1 hour group sessions once a week for 10 weeks.
- ❖ Groups of 4-7 students in similar grade levels.
- ❖ Led by an agency clinician with special training to run these groups.
- ❖ Content: coping skills, feelings identification, relaxation, positive activities, social support, problem solving, reducing any stress or anxiety they feel about being exposed to a stressful/traumatic event, getting back to doing what they want and need to be able to do.
- ❖ The mental health clinician will send a letter home to parents each week to let them know what their child is learning during these sessions and to tell parent how they can help at home.

Parent Sessions

- ❖ Group leaders will hold 1-3 group parent sessions to inform parents of the skills that the children are learning so they can support them at home. Parents will also be invited to meet privately toward the end of the program with the group leader and their child to hear their story.

Individual Student Sessions

- ❖ Group leaders will hold 1 - 2 individual sessions with each student to help them develop their stories about their traumatic events and help them prepare to share their story with their parent.
