Operation Trust storyline.

Operation Trust and when that came into the current narrative:

“Operation Trust was a Soviet counterintelligence operation run from 1921 to 1926 by the Cheka (later OGPU), aimed at neutralizing opposition to the Bolshevik regime. It involved creating a fake anti-Bolshevik underground organization, the Monarchist Union of Central Russia, to lure in and identify monarchists, White Russian exiles, and other dissidents. The operation deceived enemies into believing they were part of a legitimate resistance, encouraging them to reveal their networks, plans, and contacts.

By infiltrating and controlling this fictitious group, the Cheka arrested or eliminated thousands of opponents, disrupted anti-Soviet activities, and consolidated Bolshevik control.

The term "Operation Trust" has also been referenced in modern conspiracy theories, particularly in online communities, where it's used to describe alleged government or elite operations to manipulate or discredit dissident movements. These claims often lack credible evidence and draw loose parallels to the historical operation, suggesting modern "false flag" efforts to control opposition narratives.”
