PURDUE STORYLINES FOR THE NCAA TOURNAMENT

- No. 4-seeded Purdue makes its 29th NCAA Tournament appearance on Thursday, facing a Vermont team that owns the nation's longest win streak (21 games) in the NCAA Midwest Regional first round. Tip is scheduled for 7:27 p.m. ET / 6:27 p.m. CT, in Milwaukee on TruTV.
- Purdue's 29 appearances are the 22nd most in NCAA Tournament history and Purdue's 35 wins and 63 games are the 28th most.
- Purdue returns to Wisconsin for the NCAA Tournament for the first time since its first tournament appearance in 1969. The Boilermakers won two games behind Rick Mount to advance to the 1969 Final Four.
- Purdue is 19-7 all-time in NCAA Tournament first-round games. Since the 1994 season, Purdue is 14-2 in its opening game of the NCAA Tournament.
- Since the start of February, the four teams in this "pod" are a combined 39-6.
- Purdue's nine NCAA Tournament appearances over the last 11 years (since 2006-07) are the 10th most in the country (Duke, Gonzaga, Kansas, Michigan State, Wisconsin - 11; Louisville, North Carolina, Villanova, Xavier - 10).
- Purdue is 1-of-4 Big Ten teams to make each of the last three NCAA Tournaments (Michigan State, Wisconsin, Purdue, Maryland).
- Purdue has won at least 25 games in six of Painter's 12 years at Purdue and in seven of his 13 years as a collegiate head coach (25 at SIU in 2003-04).
- Purdue won its league-best 23rd Big Ten Championship and its 12th outright title this year. Purdue won the league crown by two games.
- Purdue has now won two Big Ten regular-season titles in the last eight years. Only Ohio State (3; 2010, 2011, 2012) has more titles in that span.
- The Boilermakers have been ranked in the AP Top 25 in each of the last 37 polls, the seventh-longest active streak nationally and longest streak in the Big Ten (Wisconsin - 18). The streak of 37 consecutive weeks being ranked is the second-longest streak in school history.
- Purdue is 28-1 since the start of last year when outrebounding opponents by 10 or more. The lone loss came to Minnesota this year.
- Purdue's 81.5 free throw percentage in Big Ten play was the second-best percentage in Big Ten history.
- Purdue ranks in the nation's top 30 in eight statistical categories. The Boilermakers are fourth in assists (18.1), seventh in 3-point percentage (.406), 12th in scoring margin (+13.0), 15th in personal fouls (15.8), 18th in rebound margin (+6.8), 20th in free throw percentage (.764), 21st in assist / turnover ratio (1.38) and 27th in field goal percentage (.480).
- Caleb Swanigan needs one double-double to own the Big Ten's single-season record with 27 (Jerry Lucas - three times; Brad Sellers - 26)
- Caleb Swanigan's 227 rebounds in Big Ten play were the most since Michigan's Rudy Tomjanovich had 227 in 1970 ... 47 years ago!
- Vincent Edwards needs seven assists to become the second player in school history with 1,000 pts, 500 rebs and 300 asts (E'Twaun Moore).
- Head coach Matt Painter has passed Tom Davis for 16th place the Big Ten's career victories list in league games only with 127 wins.
- Matt Painter has won 65.1 percent of his games at Purdue. Legendary coach Gene Keady won 65.5 percent of his games at Purdue (1981-05).

PURDUE'S NCAA TOURNAMENT HISTORY

- This will be Purdue's 29th NCAA Tournament in school history, ranking 22nd all-time among Division I schools.
- Purdue owns a 35-28 overall record, ranking 28th in NCAA Tournament history in tournament wins and games played.
- Purdue has reached the Sweet 16 nine times and has advanced to two Final Fours, coming in 1969 and 1980.
- With this year's appearance, every senior class since the Class of 1983 has appeared in two NCAA Tournaments with the exception of the 2004, 2005, 2006 and 2007 classes (one appearance each).

THE HISTORY BETWEEN THE TEAMS

- Purdue owns a 1-0 record against Vermont, defeating the Catamounts 107-79 in the second game of the 2015-16 season (Nov. 15, 2015).
- Purdue made a school-record 18 3-pointers in the victory and had six players in double figures, led by Dakota Mathias with 17 and Isaac Haas with 16 points.
- The Boilermakers shot 55.4 percent from the field and had 24 assists against just five turnovers. Purdue outscored Vermont 60-45 in the opening half.
- That marked the only meeting EVER against a school currently in the America East Conference.

THE CONNECTIONS

- Purdue's Ryan Cline and Vermont's Josh Spiedel are close friends having been AAU teammates. Cline and Spiedel were texting moments after the brackets were announced Sunday night.
- Just months removed from a serious car crash in February 2015 that delayed his arrival at Vermont last year, Purdue honored Spiedel before their game on Nov. 15, 2015. The standing ovation lasted about three minutes and Cline led the Purdue team over from the bench to honor Spiedel.
- Vermont has four Indiana natives on its roster. In addition to Spiedel, Everett and Ernie Duncan (Evansville) and Dre Wills (Indianapolis) all hail from Indiana.

AS THE UNDERDOG

- Purdue relishes the role of being the underdog, ranking fourth among all schools in NCAA Tournament history in wins by an underdog.

COACH PAINTER IS THE ONLY ONE

• Purdue head coach Matt Painter is the only active Big Ten coach to have won at home and on the road against every current member of the Big Ten Conference.

PURDUE BASKETBALL HISTORY

- Purdue is in its 119th season of basketball, owning a 1,761-1,002 (.636) all-time record. The Boilermakers rank 19th all-time in victories (1,761) and their 63.6 winning percentage is 20th all-time.
- Purdue has had just two head coaches, Gene Keady and Matt Painter, since the start of the 1980-81 season, a span of 36 years.
- Since the Ray Eddy era began in 1950, Purdue has had just six head coaches in 67 years and just eight head coaches in the last 100 years.

THE WINNING WAYS

- Purdue has won 25 games for just the 13th time in school history (119 years), including five times in Matt Painter's 12 seasons at Purdue.
- The school record for most wins in a season is 29 (2010, 1994, 1988).

BIG WINS

- Purdue's 12 wins by 20 or more points rank fourth nationally, and since the start of last year, 22 of Purdue's 51 wins have come by 20 or more points.
- Purdue's 12 wins by 20 or more points are the most in school history.

REGIONAL DOMINANCE

- Purdue owns a 12-3 record against teams from Indiana and surrounding states. The lone losses have come to Louisville and Michigan (twice).

HEATING UP IN FEBRUARY AND MARCH

- Purdue has gone 8-2 since the start of February defeating Northwestern (twice), Maryland, Indiana (twice), Rutgers, Michigan State and Penn State.
- The win over Indiana on Feb. 28, gave Purdue seven wins in the month of February for the first time since the 1999-00 season (7).

PLAYING IN THE MUD

- Purdue went 6-3 in Big Ten play when scoring 78 or more points, having lost to Minnesota, Iowa and Nebraska.
- When scoring 77 points or fewer in Big Ten play, Purdue went 8-1, losing to Michigan on Feb. 25.

NO BLOWOUTS

- Since the start of last year, Purdue is 1-of-3 schools to have not lost a game by 15 or more points (Purdue, Gonzaga, Iowa State).

CAN'T HOLD HALFTIME LEADS VS. IOWA

- Since the start of last year, Purdue is 41-6 when leading at halftime, including 18-1 this year (loss to Iowa on Jan. 12).
- However, Purdue is 1-3 against Iowa when leading at the break. The Boilermakers are 40-3 against everyone else.

20-20 VISION

- Purdue has already had 24, 20-point performances by five different players this year. Purdue had 13, 20-point showings all of last year.

BIG HOME WINS

- Purdue finished 8-1 in Big Ten play at Mackey Arena, with the lone loss coming to Minnesota in overtime on Jan. 1.
- Since that loss, Purdue won its seven games by an average of 18.1 points per game and all of them by double-digits. Its closest games during the streak was 11 points twice (Wisconsin, Indiana).

BEATING RANKED TEAMS

- For the first time since the 1989-90 season, Purdue has won four straight games over ranked teams. Purdue has defeated Notre Dame, Wisconsin, Northwestern and Maryland during the current stretch.
- The school record for most consecutive wins over ranked foes is six set during the 1986-87 and 1987-88 seasons.
- Purdue's 21-point win over No. 25-ranked Northwestern was tied for the fourth-largest margin of victory over a ranked team in Purdue history.

THE COMEBACK KIDS

- With its 10-point comeback win over Penn State on Feb. 21, Purdue has won four games this year when it has trailed by 10 points or more. Three of the comebacks (Notre Dame, Georgia State and Maryland) have come during the second half and by 12 points or more.
- Purdue's four comebacks of 10 points or more are tied for the second most in a season in school history (1982-83 -- 6). It also marks the second time in three years that Purdue has had four 10-point rallies.
- Purdue is now 5-4 this year when trailing at halftime, and since the start of the 2014-15 season, Purdue is 14-11 when trailing at the break.

ONLY MATTERS AT THE END

- Purdue led for a grand total of 59 seconds in the win over Maryland.
- According to KenPomeroy.com, Purdue has won three games when its win probability was under 20 percent at any point in the second half (Georgia State, Notre Dame, Maryland). It was under 10 percent in the victories over Notre Dame and Maryland.

THE LIMIT IS 60

- Purdue is now 125-4 when under Painter when holding foes to 59 or fewer points. Three of the four losses came during the 2012-13 season.

DOUBLE-DOUBLE LEADERS

- With Caleb Swanigan leading the charge, Purdue has recorded 30 double-doubles this year to lead the country.

THE MIDDLETOWN CONNECTION

• With Caleb Swanigan chasing Ohio state legend Jerry Lucas in several of the Big Ten rebounding and double-double records, there is a connection with the former Buckeye.

• Vincent Edwards hails from the same hometown as Lucas (Middletown, Ohio) and broke Lucas' career rebounds record at Middletown. Edwards is the second all-time leading scorer at Middletown behind Lucas.

THE DEFENSIVE STOPPER

• Dakota Mathias has improved drastically on the defensive end and should be recognized as one of the top candidates for Big Ten Defensive Player of the Year.

Angel Delgado	Seton Hall	13.06
Caleb Swanigan	Purdue	12.59
Steve Taylor	Toledo	12.38
Rokas Gustys	Hofstra	12.07

▶ Entering the NCAA Tournament.

• Swanigan grabbed 227 rebounds in Big Ten play this year, equaling the most for a Big Ten player since Jerry Lucas had 253 in 1962. Michigan's Rudy Tomjanovich also had 227 in 1969-70.

• Swanigan's 403 rebounds this year are the seventh most by a player in Big Ten history. Just four players have had more in a season.

▶ BIG TEN SINGLE-SEASON REBOUND LEADERS (ALL-TIME)

Player (Team)	Rebs.	Year
Jerry Lucas (Ohio State)	499	1961-62
Jerry Lucas (Ohio State)	470	1960-61
Jerry Lucas (Ohio State)	442	1959-60
Walt Bellamy (Indiana)	428	1960-61
Reggie Evans (Iowa)	416	2000-01

Caleb Swanigan (Purdue)	403	2016-17
Draymond Green (Michigan State)	394	2011-12
Johnny Green (Michigan State)	392	1957-58

▶ Entering the NCAA Tournament.

• Swanigan needs 15 rebounds to become the 12th player in school history with 700 career rebounds.

• Swanigan needs eight points to become the 12th player in Purdue history with 600 points in a season.

• Swanigan is on pace (based on 35 games) to have 648 points, 440 rebounds and 100 assists. He would become the fourth player nationally, and the second major-college player, since 1992-93 to have a 600-400-90 season. The other? Wake Forest legend Tim Duncan.

• As it stands now, Swanigan needs just eight points to become the fourth player with 600-400-90.

▶ 600 PTS, 400 REBS, 90 ASTS IN SEASON (SINCE 1992-93)

- ▶ Record at Purdue: 263-141 (.651) / 12th year | Career Record: 288-146 (.664) / 13th year
- With a pair of Sweet 16 appearances, eight NCAA Tournament berths, Big Ten regular-season and tournament titles and an international gold medal on his résumé, 12th-year head coach Matt Painter is widely regarded as one of the brightest minds in all of college basketball.
 - Painter affirmed his long-term commitment to Purdue in March of 2011, agreeing to a new eight-year contract that will keep him in West Lafayette through at least the 2018-19 season. He then followed that up in August of 2016, signing a three-year extension good through the 2021-22 year.
 - Painter has averaged over 21 wins per season during his tenure at the helm of the Purdue program, including at least 20 victories in eight seasons.
 - Painter's tenure has seen Purdue basketball restore its status among the upper echelon of college basketball programs. The last eight years have seen six 20-win seasons and NCAA Tournament berths, two Sweet 16 appearances, a regular-season Big Ten title and a Big Ten Tournament crown.
 - The three winningest classes in program history are the classes of 2011, 2012 and 2010, respectively, and five of the 10 winningest individual players Purdue has ever seen have come from the Painter ranks. Success, however, didn't happen overnight.
 - Painter officially became the 18th head men's basketball coach in Purdue history on April 1, 2005, and immediately set about laying the groundwork for a dramatic reversal in the program's fortunes.
 - The Boilermakers were at their best during the 2009 postseason run, rattling off double-digit victories over Penn State and Illinois to reach the Big Ten Tournament final, where they dispatched Ohio State, 65-61, to earn the first conference tournament crown in program history.
 - Painter has been named Big Ten Coach of the Year three times in the last eight seasons, earning the consensus award in 2008 and 2011, and winning the coaches' vote in 2010. He is one of only six men to win the award more at least three times since its inception in 1974.
 - Painter has seen a total of 24 players earn a combined 44 Academic All-Big Ten honors during his tenure as head coach. Painter has also mentored an Academic All-American, as Moore earned second-team honors during the 2009-10 season.

Navy Seals' biggest benefit has arrived for Purdue

Pete DiPrimio / Fort Wayne News-Sentinel / March 8, 2017

Even now, three years later, the Navy Seals experience steels these Purdue Boilermakers as nothing else could.

"When we were holding that (Big Ten championship) trophy," forward Vincent Edwards says, "that's what we were reflecting on."

The lessons of toughness, togetherness, trust and leadership resonate as No. 13 Purdue (25-6) braces for a Big Ten tourney run, and beyond, with this over-riding thought.

Once is more than enough.

"It was good for us," coach Matt Painter says. "I don't think it would be good for us every year, but it was good for us at that time."

Hold on, for just a moment, about Friday's opening-round game in Washington D.C. against either Michigan (20-11) or Illinois (18-13), and flash back to the fall of 2014. The Boilers were coming off consecutive losing seasons, including a last-place Big Ten finish that had the program at a crossroad and Painter feeling win-or-else pressure.

Painter had brought in a freshman class -- led by Vincent Edwards, Dakota Mathias, P.J. Thompson and Isaac Haas -- designed to help produce a return to basketball glory. Painter wanted to do something different to show them, and returning veterans such as Rapheal Davis and A.J. Hammons, that success came with a price.

Enter the Navy Seals, an elite special operations military force.

"They put us through maybe three percent of what they go through," Edwards says. "I can't imagine a full training."

Two Navy Seals delivered a weekend to remember.

A weekend.

"Don't act like it was six months," Painter says with a laugh.

Players got white T-shirts with their last names on the back and front. They wore fatigue pants. They had to sleep in the locker room. Their cell phones were taken away.

"This was for the whole weekend," Edwards says.

And they worked.

"We'd wake up at 4 or 5 in the morning," Edwards says. "We had to do anything they told us. If you walked somewhere by yourself, you got punished. If you did anything without communicating or talking, you got punished."

"We had to carry these tree logs on our shoulders around campus. You could see all our peers laughing, enjoying it, recording it. It was rough. We were flipping tires, rolling through sand, jumping into swimming pools, carrying each other in the swimming pools and almost drowning. We carried each other up hills. It was unbelievable."

"Everybody puts in work on basketball and in the film room and stuff, but that kind of work is extra effort. A lot of guys could have said, this is dumb, we're not doing it and given up on it. We stuck together as a team and got through it."

The result was a tougher team -- and a return to Purdue's winning ways. It has won 72 games in the last three seasons with its first outright Big Ten championship since 1996, winning the conference by two games.

"I think the Navy Seals send a message -- you think about the physical workouts, but it's more about the mental approach, the leadership approach, about your teammates, that you never leave a teammate behind," Painter says. "There are a lot of things you have to be there for your team and each other, and also have that trust. That's a hard thing to do. It was more of a classroom approach, although we did physical things. We were trying to set the tone after coming off two losing seasons that mental toughness and leadership matter."

"It was good for us."

As the Big Ten tourney No. 1 seed for the first time ever, Purdue gets a double bye, which gives it an extra day of rest over Michigan or Illinois. The Boilers played each team once -- losing at Michigan and beating Illinois at Mackey Arena.

"This week was more about getting healthy, getting prepared for the tournament," Painter says. "You go hard, but keep it short."

"Both teams will be quality opponents that are playing well, so it's more about preparing ourselves. Every coach tries to get his team in the right frame of mind."

"Strange things happen in the tournament. Anybody can beat anybody."

Given Big Ten parity, close games are likely, and these Boilers seem well equipped to handle them. They've won eight of their last nine games. In their last five games, they shot 83.7 percent from the line. They minimized turnovers.

"Our guys have been able to hang in there," Painter says. "They're doing a better job of closing out games, getting a stop or making a play on the offensive end."

This was what Painter had hoped to get from the Navy Seal experience.

Three years later, the biggest benefit has arrived.

"I still have my t-shirt," Edwards says. "It's all muddy. It's a reminder of the work we put in."

"The coaches wanted to find some way to add cohesiveness to the team, and that was the best way they knew to do it. We joked that we wanted to do it again, but, really, we didn't. Sometimes, you've got to sell it to your coaches to have a little bit of fun."

He laughs. It's all good now. And it soon might get a lot better.

Buying in has Big Ten-champ Purdue riding high

Pete DiPrimio / Fort Wayne News-Sentinel / March 7, 2017

As Purdue rallied to a Big Ten basketball title, one thing seemed as clear as a Gene Keady foot stomp:

The Boilers bought into Matt Painter's coaching.

You'd better believe that doesn't always happen -- and that it matters.

Specifically, they focused on team success rather than individual glory. They defended collectively rather than relying on shot-blocking preservation. They got the ball inside and when they were double teamed, they kicked out to perimeter sharpshooters. They followed the scouting report. They emphasized good shots over forced ones. They were mature when the starting lineup was changed and playing time fluctuated.

In other words, they tried to do what they were coached to do.

The result -- a 25-6 record, victories in eight of the last nine games, a first-ever Big Ten tourney No. 1 seed and a season-high No. 13 AP poll ranking.

Now, with Friday's tourney opener in Washington D.C. looming against either Michigan (20-11) or Illinois (18-13), and the NCAA Tournament to come, buying in is more important than ever

How hard is it for players?

Some of it involves perspective. Take sophomore forward Caleb Swanigan, who has started all 65 games of his career.

"Buying in wasn't that hard," he says. "This team was tired of being right there, but not quite finishing. We wanted to take the next step. From the beginning of the season, everyone had bought in."

Then there's junior forward Vincent Edwards, good enough to enter the NBA Draft last spring, mature enough to understand when he lost his starting role for eight games, wise enough to recognize freshman know-it-all certainty can give way to a veteran's reality.

"It was tough at first," he says. "As a freshman, sometimes you have selective hearing. You think you know a lot of stuff when you really don't.

"It didn't take us as long to buy in. When we first got here, we were feeling ourselves a little bit. Coach Painter did a good job of installing what we were trying to do here. We kept reminding ourselves this is why we're here -- to help restore this great legacy from this great school. The coaches did a great job, we kept fighting, stuck with it and listened to them."

Take junior center Isaac Haas. He started the first 15 games of the season, and hasn't started since. There were times, because of matchups with opponents going to smaller, quicker lineups (think Notre Dame), that he spent most of his time on the bench. He didn't pout.

"When I came in, I had already bought in," he says. "I knew (Painter) was a great coach. I knew he was a great guy. He wanted the best for us. He was going to push us. He was going to tell us the truth in terms of playing time. Whether or not you think you did something wrong, he'll give you what he thinks is right or wrong. He'll prove it. I think that's what convinced me to buy into this program. I trusted him. It's special to be a part of something like is."

Painter appreciates this team's buy-in because he's had teams that didn't. That happened big time in 2013 and '14, when the Boilers had consecutive losing seasons. They finished last in the Big Ten in 2014.

Some of those players, who had solid basketball skills, were poor fits for Painter's style and approach. He corrected that with the junior class of Edwards, Haas, Dakota Mathias and P.J. Thompson.

"It's a lot easier to get guys to buy in when they're already that way," Painter says. "That's why recruiting is so important. You want a quality player and a coachable guy who understands they're going to have to make sacrifices to win.

"It is a difficult thing because in recruiting they need to know how this will work for them. They just do. Each guy wants to know, 'Where do I fit? Where does this put me in comparison to the other schools recruiting me?'

"I've always tried to recruit with the idea of helping them on both ends of the court. A lot of times in recruiting you hear parents talk, coaches talk, players talk, and it's all offense. We all know it really helps if you can defend. It really helps getting on the court if you can defend initially.

"So you try to give them the full scope of what it's going to take to be successful, but also what it will take for them to get on the court. If you can explain that, and they're intelligent, they understand about buying in before they get here."

How challenging is it if the player hasn't bought in before arriving on campus?

"It's really hard," Painter says. "That's why you see a lot of transfers or a lot of people play the blame game -- 'Why aren't I playing? I'm as talented as this guy.'

"Well, you're not as productive as he is. That's what it gets down to. People look at their overall ability instead of their overall production. Part of being productive is trying to do what the coaches are asking you to do, and do a lot of the little things that don't show up on the box score."

Thompson reflects that. He was an undersized guard out of Indianapolis who generated little recruiting buzz, but who has delivered exactly what Painter wanted -- a solid guard who makes good decisions, rarely turns it over and consistently hits outside shots. He shoots 39 percent from three-point range, and ranks among the nation's best with 94 assists and 22 turnovers.

"Coach Painter has made it public that he recruited the type of guys he wanted," Thompson says. "The guys here before, they were good guys, but they were kind of different people. Our focus is on basketball and wanting to get better and play as a team.

"We could have gone to a different program and a different system and we'd have averaged more points, averaged more assists. Here (opposing teams have to) worry about anyone. Anyone can go off on any given night. You can go off in another. It makes it a lot of fun. It makes us hard to guard."

More than that, it makes the Boilers hard to beat.

Project Biggie: How Swanigan became the nation's top power forward

Luke Winn / Sports Illustrated / February 13, 2017

The six Swanigan children were all substantial, and they were nicknamed accordingly. First came Fat Cat (Carl Jr.), then Ice Cream (Corey), Fat and Sug (twins Crystal and Candance), Applehead Cut The Bull (Courtland) and, finally, Biggie (Caleb), the largest of Tanya Jackson Swanigan's babies at 24 inches, nine pounds and three ounces. He kept growing into his name, standing 6'2" and weighing 360 pounds by age 13, and now Biggie was listening to his new guardian, Roosevelt (Rose) Barnes, tell him something preposterously grandiose as they worked out on an indoor court in Fort Wayne, Ind., during the summer of 2011.

Biggie rolled his eyes. His vertical was a few inches, max, and if asked to run, all he could do was shuffle. But Barnes, a sports agent who played baseball, basketball and football at Purdue and then spent four seasons as a linebacker with the Lions, wanted Biggie to believe in his potential. So as they went through a progression of baby hooks, drop-steps and the like, Barnes instructed his protégé, "Say it back to me: I'm the best power forward in the world.

"Come on. Say it."

Reluctantly, Biggie gave in. Two weeks earlier Carl Jr. had persuaded him to fly from Salt Lake City to Fort Wayne to live with Barnes. The family had met Barnes in Indiana in 2003, after they'd fled Utah on a bus with Tanya, who was seeking refuge from their father, Carl Sr., in a domestic violence shelter. "What I endured was horrific," Tanya says, "and I did my best to keep our heads above water." But theirs was a nomadic existence among apartments and shelters in Utah and Indiana. Carl Jr. wanted Barnes to adopt Biggie, to give him stability and a shot at the NBA.

Biggie had emerged from the Fort Wayne airport that June carrying all his possessions in a single duffel bag, waddling toward Barnes's car in his one good outfit: a shirt, tie and khakis. He was a full two inches shorter and 100 pounds heavier than Fat Cat had described over the phone. After Biggie quickly became exhausted in their first workout, Barnes took him to a cardiologist to check if he had heart problems. Biggie passed all the stress tests, and this gave Barnes the assurance he needed to proceed: "He's not going to die."

That was where Project Biggie began, and six years later Caleb Swanigan is 6'9" and—after strict dieting and relentless training—250 pounds. He arrived at Purdue in the fall of 2015 as a McDonald's All-American after graduating from Fort Wayne's Homestead High in just three years, then averaged 10.2 points and 8.3 rebounds for a Boilermakers team that was upset by Arkansas–Little Rock in the first round of the NCAA tournament. He has since made the leap from solid freshman starter to dominant sophomore force, with statistical production at a level not seen since Blake Griffin's sophomore season at Oklahoma, in 2008–09.

Averaging 19.0 points and 12.8 rebounds for the No. 16 Boilermakers, Biggie is a near-lock to be first-team All-America. He has 21 double doubles in 25 games (including four with at least 20 points and 20 rebounds); the highest defensive rebound percentage (33.2%) by a major-conference player in kenpom.com's database; and a chance to become the first since Griffin to average 13 boards in this millennium. "You can tell a player, 'You need to go after every rebound,' but they won't actually go after every rebound," says Purdue coach Matt Painter. "Biggie now goes after every rebound."

Biggie can now use brute force to score on the block and a soft touch to make threes, and he can pass deftly out of the post or in high-low situations. He is not yet the best power forward in the world, but he has become the best one in college basketball, where no one, this season, has been able to stop him.

Biggie has always been Biggie, but his story is a series of transformations, some as public as his shrinking waistline, some as private as what happened last September, when a guest speaker came to address the Boilermakers in their film room at Mackey Arena.

Chris Herren was a 1990s phenom at Fresno State whose story of drug addiction and recovery was the subject of a 2011 ESPN documentary. Herren has spoken to hundreds of teams since, and while he encourages his audiences to engage, he says it's rare for college players to show much vulnerability. But at Purdue, as Herren talked about putting his alcoholic father in rehab and repairing his relationship with his high-school-age son—how he is trying to do the right things but knows there were many ways he failed—it hit Biggie right in the heart.

"Your son definitely does appreciate you," Biggie told Herren. "I lost my father to addiction; I know what it's like to see someone never make it back from that side. For you to make it back for him...."

From there, something opened up inside Biggie, who'd been named one of the team's four captains in the off-season. "When he was done talking, there were guys in tears," says junior point guard and co-captain P.J. Thompson. "Most of them had no idea." Vince Edwards, another junior co-captain, says, "There were times last year when we felt like we couldn't reach Biggie; he'd get so angry that he just couldn't hear us. After that, it was like, O.K., I understand where it's coming from." Says Herren, "It was a breakthrough moment for all of us."

Biggie had begun by sharing the reason he wears number 50: it was the age at which Carl Sr. died of heart failure in a Salt Lake City hospital in 2013. He had been a prodigious, 6'7" streetballer, nicknamed Big Smooth, who could shoot ambidextrously, and he was a kind soul when he was sober. "But the whole family," Tanya says, "was a victim of my husband's addiction to crack cocaine." She met Carl Sr. through a Pentecostal church, but one year into their marriage he lost his job and began dealing crack, and eventually using it too. "It was like living in a nightmare," Tanya says. At first she tried to rescue him from crackhouses; later she fled his attacks, and he accrued a rap sheet that included a murder charge in Utah. (He was acquitted in 1995.)

By the late 2000s Biggie, who was seven years younger than his next oldest sibling, was the only one living with Tanya full-time. He befriended other shelter kids, for whom naiveté was almost a blessing. "We only knew what was right in front of us," Biggie says. "We didn't know how big the world was, how much better it could be."

Carl Jr. had come close to knowing. He was a 6'9", 335-pound power forward with three-point range; Barnes describes him as "Zach Randolph with a better jump shot." Playing for an Indiana-based AAU program at the Kingwood Classic in Houston in 2003, Carl Jr. outshone future lottery pick LaMarcus Aldridge and soon joined Blessed IJN, a program coached by one of Barnes's friends. Barnes wanted to assume guardianship of Carl Jr. and help him prepare for college—but after a few months Carl Jr. split for Utah to reunite with a girlfriend and play his senior season at Hunter High in West Valley City. "When Rose first found me," Carl Jr. laments, "I was already 17, stuck in my ways, not coachable."

In November 2004, Carl Jr. signed a national letter of intent with Mississippi; his recruiter there, Tracy Dildy, called him a "freak of nature" with NBA potential. But over the next two years Carl Jr. surfaced and then disappeared from prep schools in Indiana, Alabama, North Carolina and Pennsylvania, without ever qualifying academically to play D-I basketball. Upon returning to Salt Lake City in March 2006, he got into an altercation outside Club Vortex that resulted in a 5'9" man firing a 9-mm handgun at Carl Jr.'s head.

It was a tragedy and a miracle: The hollow-point bullet entered Carl Jr.'s mouth, deflected off his facial bones and exited through his right eye socket—without impacting his brain. For the first few days that Carl Jr. was in the hospital, nine-year-old Biggie was unable to enter the room. "I couldn't look," Biggie says. "People would go in and come out crying."

Carl Jr. was fitted for a glass eye, ending his pro hoops aspirations. Watching the NBA made him sick: "I'd get disappointed in myself when I saw people playing that I used to dominate." And so in 2011, when Tanya was planning to leave Salt Lake for Houston, and a significantly out-of-shape Biggie said he wanted to be a basketball player, Carl Jr. stepped up in the one way he knew how. He called Barnes and pleaded with him to take the boy.

"If you don't, he's gonna end up just like us," Carl Jr. said, meaning himself and his other siblings, none of whom made it in basketball. "And Biggie is different than all of us. He's got a different demeanor. He's smarter. He's calmer. He's still got a chance."

They had come so far by spring 2015. Biggie was a five-star recruit who'd just led Homestead High to a state title and been named Indiana's Mr. Basketball, and he and Barnes had an agreement on how they would select Biggie's college. It would not be based on emotion, friends, the campus or anything other than which coach would best position him to be drafted by an NBA team. It would be a business decision.

This philosophy was easier for Barnes, a 56-year-old agent, to adhere to than it was for Biggie, a 17-year-old with a grudge. In the summer before Biggie started ninth grade, what he wanted most was a scholarship offer from Purdue. He shone in a showcase in West Lafayette, Ind., with Painter in attendance, but when the coach saw the then 6' 4", 300-pound Biggie, he remembers thinking, "He's going to be an All-Pro NFL left tackle." The Boilermakers wanted to wait and see, which Biggie took as a challenge. After his biggest games as a freshman on Homestead's varsity, he'd text his stats to Purdue assistant coach Jack Owens, and when Biggie returned to the same showcase the following summer he—according to Barnes's unofficial record-keeping—averaged 37 points and 24 rebounds. The Purdue coaches told Barnes they still wanted to wait, and when Biggie heard that, he said, "I'm done. I'm never going to Purdue."

On April 10, 2015, Biggie was in Portland preparing for the Nike Hoop Summit and decided that he wanted to end his recruiting process. "I made up my mind," he told Barnes over the phone. "I'm going to Cal."

Biggie says he "really, seriously" wanted to go to Cal, which was on his public list of finalists along with Michigan State, Kentucky, Duke and Purdue. (The Boilermakers by then had offered him a scholarship.) He liked Berkeley, and his friends and Hoop Summit teammates Jaylen Brown and Ivan Rabb were also going to commit to the Bears.

"I refuse to allow you to go to Cal," Barnes told him, and listed the ways it violated their business-decision criteria. For one, they had agreed to wait until May, when rosters and coaching staffs were more settled. Plus, it was essential for Biggie to brand himself as a power forward rather than as an undersized center, which wouldn't happen if he played alongside Rabb, another power forward.

"This is my career," Biggie protested.

Barnes, who was in Portland at the time, was so upset that he packed up and headed for the airport. At 3:01 p.m. Pacific time, Biggie, still set on making a decision, tweeted (and made national news with) what he figured was a "compromise": He was committing to MSU, a school both he and Barnes liked.

The problem was that the Spartans didn't fit the criteria either. They already had several players who profiled as power forwards. They wanted Biggie to live in a general-population dorm; Barnes insisted on an apartment and strict training-table supervision. "If a kid has a drug problem, would you put him in a crackhouse?" Barnes says. "Biggie had an eating problem that he was overcoming. So it was a dealbreaker if he lives in a dorm. You know how college kids are; they're eating pizza, drinking beer, not thinking about nutrition. If he's around that stuff, it's easier to eat that stuff."

Biggie decommitted from Michigan State on May 7, and on May 19, committed to the school he'd sworn off: Purdue. It was the best business decision. The Boilermakers had two 7-foot centers, A.J. Hammons and Isaac Haas, and no true power forwards, ensuring that Biggie would start at the four. They also had private, apartment-style living available in a building directly across from Mackey Arena, and training table and catering that would accommodate his diet of broiled chicken, fish and vegetables.

"I didn't want to come to Purdue," Biggie says. "I just had to put my feelings aside. Purdue had the best basketball situation, and that's all I based it off of."

He didn't even call Painter to tell him the news—Biggie made Barnes do it. They were mad at each other: Biggie at Barnes for not trusting him to make his own decision, Barnes at Biggie for letting emotion hijack the process. Says Biggie, "It was quiet around the house for a couple of weeks."

To free up a scholarship, Purdue also had to make a business decision. The day he decommitted from Michigan State, the Boilermakers had a transfer recruit in West Lafayette on an official visit. "It was one of the lowest feelings I've had as a coach," says Painter, who had to inform the player his offer was on ice. "I loved the kid, and he would have fit here. But he's not Biggie Swanigan. So you've gotta make the decision that's best for your program."

It's noon on the Wednesday after Biggie had 22 points and 10 rebounds in a home rout of Illinois, and the hood on his black sweatshirt is cinched so tightly that all you can see are his eyes and nose. In matching black sweatpants he cuts a menacing figure—an executioner killing calories on a StairMaster. He practices in long sleeves and pants, a vestige of the phase when he was trying to heat up quickly, perspire and cut weight. He's so used to wearing them that if he doesn't now, it just feels weird. (In high school, according to former teammate Dana Batt, Swanigan's go-to proclamation after hitting big shots was, "I'm always warm!")

Josh Bonhotal, a Purdue strength coach, looks on from his office doorway in the training facility and says, "He's climbed Everest on there a handful of times." Biggie is so driven that he'll work out after games—even after playing 41 minutes in an overtime loss to Minnesota on Jan. 1—but Bonhotal does not worry about overexertion.

"That pales in comparison to the confidence this stuff gives him," says Bonhotal. "When he steps on the court, he knows without a shadow of a doubt, There is not one dude out here that works harder than me. I've earned the right to go put up 20 and 20."

Indeed, during pregame warmups, Biggie has a new tradition of predicting his rebound total—frequently 20—to assistant Brandon Brantley. And now that Biggie is no longer the boy who's anchored to the ground, it's more effective to motivate him from the other end of the spectrum. Barnes keeps a studio apartment in West Lafayette so that, most mornings, he can run Biggie through similar versions of the old shooting and skill workouts they did in Fort Wayne. Except that the man who helped save Biggie no longer makes him declare that he's the best power forward in the world.

"Let me ask you something, son," Barnes will say lovingly, especially in the wake of Biggie's biggest games. "What are you?"

Biggie will roll his eyes as he yields to the new routine.

"I'm garbage," he'll say, "until you tell me I'm not."

Dakota Mathias rises from bit player to starting catalyst

Pete DiPrimio / Fort Wayne News-Sentinel / February 8, 2017

Dakota Mathias is no fool. He channels his inner Rapheal Davis because he knows it works, helps Purdue win and guarantees playing time.

That all matters, especially with the No. 16 Boilers (19-5 overall, 8-3 in the Big Ten) heading into the lion's den that is Assembly Hall Thursday night for a pivotal game against rival Indiana (15-9, 5-6).

Mathias has morphed from bit player -- mostly for offense -- to an all-around starting catalyst for a Big Ten contender. The junior guard thrives with a high basketball IQ and fierce competitiveness honed by intense family competition, refined by Purdue's blue-collar tenacity.

And it starts on defense.

Mathias consistently guards opposing teams' best perimeter scorers. From Louisville's Donovan Mitchell to Notre Dame's Steve Vasturia to Iowa's Peter Jok to Northwestern's Vic Law to Illinois' Malcolm Hill, he gets guys who put up big numbers, and much of the time, shuts them down.

Specifically, he held Mitchell, a 14.8-point scorer, to nine; Vasturia (14.1) to three (on 1-for-8 shooting) and Law (13.5) to one (on 0-for-7 shooting).

This is huge given Mathias arrived as such a defensive liability. Boiler coaches tried hiding him on that end of the floor. How do you explain the turnaround?

"There are a couple of things," he says. "I'm in better shape. I've gotten quicker laterally. Also film study. I took a lot from what Rapheal Davis did. He knew who he was guarding a couple of days before. He started studying clips understanding guys' tendencies and how they scored in their offense, I took that from him. It helped me out this year."

Davis, the former South Side standout, was the Big Ten defensive player of the year in 2015 not so much for sheer athleticism as for his effort and determination. The 6-4, 200-pound Mathias tries duplicating that. As soon as he finds out who he'll guard for a particular game, the film study begins.

"It depends on our schedule and how many days turnaround we have," he says, "but I try to watch half hour or 45 minutes of their clips and offense, maybe a game or two if we have time. It depends on who we're playing and what our scheme will be for that game."

As for the challenge of matching up with top scorers, Mathias says, "I enjoy guarding those guys. It's big for me to do that."

If other players get hot during a game, does Mathias push coaches to put him on them? "I've done that a few times, but mostly I let the coaches do what they do. They understand what's best for the team."

Coach Matt Painter understands that the more Mathias plays, the better Purdue's victory chances are. He averages 30.8 minutes a game, second on the team to Caleb Swanigan's 31.9, and a big jump from his first two seasons, when he averaged 19.3.

"Dakota's been great," Painter says. "Where he's improved the most is defensively. As a coach, you can't have enough people you trust. A lot of times, players don't understand that. Can the coaches trust you? Can you follow your assignment? Just be accountable. He's gotten better. There were some tough lessons. Last year his minutes went down."

"The true testament to a good player is when a coach can't take you out. You don't feel right taking them out. Dakota is one of those guys."

And then there's the offense. Mathias averages a career-best in scoring (10.3), field goal percentage (49.4), three-point shooting (49.5) and assists (3.7). His 85.2 percent free throw shooting is just off last year's 86.4, but he's going to the line a lot more.

His 53 three-point baskets are 12 more than any other Boiler.

"It's a number of things," he says about his offensive improvement. "It's the work I've put in. Just being more comfortable and confident out there. My minutes fluctuated my first two years, but this year it's been more consistent. It's easier to make shots where you're in the flow of the game."

Mathias is on pace to end Vince Edwards' two-year reign as team assist leader. He has 95 assists against 35 turnovers, a 3.06 assist-to-turnover ratio that ranks third in the Big Ten and No. 19 nationally. Edwards is next with 81 assists. Guard P.J. Thompson leads the Big Ten with 80 assists against just 15 turnovers.

"That's more of an aggressive thing," Mathias says. "When you can drive and come off a screen, you can read the defense. It helps get teammates open. Also the film study. You understand the defense teams are using. It helps you find gaps and penetrate the zone and have different ways to get your teammates open and get them shots."

This offensive success isn't surprising. Mathias arrived with a good-shooter reputation out of Elida, Ohio, as the third of three basketball playing brothers. He finished with a school-record 1,906 points and averaged 27.7 points over four years.

He honed his game by working at the family home gym with older brothers Dustin and Bo. Their father, Dan, built a basketball facility right off the kitchen, and the family took full advantage.

Still do.

"It's more like a small high-school gym," Mathias says. "The ceiling is arched a little bit. It has a three-point line and extends a little farther than that. It gets the job done. We always worked out there, and worked on our skills there."

Even now, over Christmas break or whenever they're all together, the brothers go at it.

"We have three-point contests and one-on-one contests," Mathias says. "Anything you can imagine. We still do it. Always. It's gotten more competitive as we've gotten older."

Who wins?

"I win every time," he says with a laugh.

Purdue's Caleb Swanigan has changed his body and his life

Myron Medcalf / ESPN.com / January 27, 2017

For Caleb Swanigan, Purdue's star power forward, it's the cheesecake.

It's always the cheesecake.

"I'm a dessert person," he told ESPN.com. "I'm not a potato chip [eater]. I can say no to those easy, but desserts are really my thing."

The sophomore knows one dessert could become two, then three, and over time, un-hinge the weight roller coaster he rode to 360 pounds the summer before eighth grade.

Throughout his youth, he floated between unstable housing situations and homeless shelters, back and forth between Indianapolis and Utah, as his mother, Tanya, tried to stabilize her life with six children, all while his father, Carl Swanigan Sr., wrestled with a crack-cocaine addiction. Swanigan developed a complicated relationship with food as he was surrounded by the unhealthy options peddled to those who can't afford to consider quality -- sugary cereal, ice cream, pizza. Today, however, the projected All-American resists the demon that haunted him before he lost more than 100 pounds in high school.

"You think it's something really small, but it just builds up," he said. "One meal won't kill you, but if it becomes three or four meals that are bad in a row, that's when it starts to hurt your body."

Things were different in Utah, where he spent a chunk of his childhood and ballooned in his youth. Then, he could not seek advice from Purdue's strength and conditioning staff, which now designs the day-to-day meal guidelines he consults as he fights to maintain his sculpted, 6-foot-9, 245-pound frame and to avoid the obesity challenges his family endures.

Caleb's father, who stood 6-foot-8, weighed nearly 500 pounds when he died three years ago, at the age of 50, of complications related to diabetes. Years of drug abuse had affected his health, too.

Before his death, Carl Swanigan Sr. played a minimal role in his son's life. Caleb was only 16 years old when he lost his father, but his father's weight challenges became the son's, too. The Purdue standout visited his father in a Utah nursing home before his death in 2013.

As a child, Swanigan ate according to availability. He did not have an abundance of good choices.

"It is a lot more expensive to eat healthy than it is to eat unhealthy," Swanigan said. "If you're in a position to eat right, then you should eat right. Sometimes, financially, it just isn't right."

His father's drug habit created a monsoon of instability. In 1995, a reporter at the Deseret News wrote that Carl Swanigan Sr. knew he "was dragging his family into poverty." Swanigan recalls staying at five different homeless shelters throughout his youth. Before eighth grade, former Purdue football star Roosevelt Barnes, now a sports agent worth $14 million, according to Forbes.com, adopted a 13-year-old Swanigan and moved the young man to Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Swanigan was living with a family friend in Utah when Barnes contacted him. He finally felt anchored to something. Prior to the move, Swanigan had endured a tumultuous education experience, as his mother tried to find a reliable living environment for her children.

"I went to four different middle schools alone, and probably nine elementary schools," Swanigan said.

When asked how many times he remembers feeling secure about his living situation, Swanigan paused.

"When I moved in with Roosevelt," he said.

The kid an aunt nicknamed "Biggie" -- "She just started singing that 'Biggie, Biggie, Biggie, can't you see?' song," says Swanigan's brother, Carl Swanigan Jr. -- transformed his body in high school and earned an invite to the McDonald's All-American game in 2015 after winning Indiana's Mr. Basketball award the same year.

He then committed to Michigan State before changing his mind -- "I just felt like it was better basketball-wise for me," he said -- and signing with the Boilermakers.

At Purdue, the staff turned a soft body into a lean powerhouse, with four 20-point, 20-rebound performances in 2016-17. His new body spawned new dreams.

Perhaps a Big Ten title for Purdue. Possibly an All-American nod. Maybe the Wooden Award. Then ... the NBA.

"I think he has a chance if he can improve his jump shot and help defense," one NBA scout told ESPN.com. "Big-time rebounder, works hard on his own. He's still more undersized center than power forward, though."

All far-fetched ideas just six years ago.

He has come so far. He will not go back.

He can't.

"We feel we can win a Big Ten championship," he said. "We're confident. We know it's been a long time since Purdue has done it. Our biggest enemy is us."

Life in homeless shelters included daily rations of bologna sandwiches and soup, along with harrowing scenes a child should not see.

Sometimes, Swanigan would watch men and women shoot heroin in the corridors of the shelters. They'd turn and stare at the boy. He'd stare back, unable to decipher what they were doing but smart enough to know it wasn't good.

"Yeah, I saw it," Swanigan said. "All you had to do was walk out and you'd see it. It was just right in front of you. That was just regular, I guess. You just get used to it."

Per Bleacher Report, the uncertainty of his life began when his mother accidentally dropped him while he was an infant. Swanigan's mother was concerned with how Swanigan Sr. would react to the bruise on his son's face, so she loaded the family onto a Greyhound bus bound for Utah.

Carl Swanigan Sr.'s bouts with the law started when he was a teenager. In 1983, an Indianapolis police officer shot him in the thigh when he allegedly tried to hit the officer with a tire iron after he and another man were caught stealing tires, according to the Indianapolis Recorder.

In 1995, he was charged and arrested for the murder of a man at a crack house in Salt Lake City. He spent five months in jail before a jury found him not guilty, citing a lack of physical evidence and questionable witness testimonies.

Carl Swanigan Sr. told the Deseret News that he "got in touch with God" while in jail and kicked his drug habit. That demon, however, returned and led to more havoc for his family in the coming years. Three of Swanigan's siblings faced criminal charges in their 20s, and all of his brothers and sisters dropped out of high school.

"I really think it did affect him to the point where he knew our dad loved us," Carl Swanigan Jr. said of the impact his father's addiction had on his younger brother. "He was just sick. And when I say sick, I mean drugs."

The same ailment fueled the rage of the man who sometimes spoke to Swanigan's mother, Tanya, with his fists. When he was younger, Swanigan said he never felt responsible for intervening because he had older siblings. As he grew older, however, he accepted a role as her protector.

"You really don't know how to process it," Swanigan said. "You really don't know how to react to it, because it's just the first time it's happening. I didn't have anyone's energy to feed off but my mom's. The few times I maybe did catch glimpses, I really didn't grasp what was going on until I got older."

His mother, then jobless, first fled Indianapolis and moved with her six children to Salt Lake City 20 years ago in search of the elusive sense of stability that plagues America's poor.

Throughout Swanigan's childhood, the family would return to Indianapolis and then go back to Utah in a ping-pong cycle of relocation. The instability left Swanigan's family in long stretches of limbo without reliable housing or food. Per the United States Department of Agriculture, 42.2 million people lived in "food-insecure" households in 2015. Swanigan's family fell into that category. When his mother could not find a stable home, the family would seek beds in a shelter.

"There's a humbleness about it that you can't have unless you experience it," Swanigan said.

His mother always tried to do right by Swanigan and his siblings. And he remains her protector, choosing to highlight the positive experiences of his youth and his mother's efforts.

"My mom always kept a roof over my head," he said.

Still, his limited food selection and a genetic disposition toward obesity merged as the boy's body expanded when he approached his teenage years.

His admitted sweet tooth expedited the weight gain.

"Don't let Biggie gas you up too much," Carl Swanigan Jr. said. "Because Biggie would eat. That boy used to eat. You know the FatBoy ice cream sandwiches? He'd eat two of them."

By the summer before eighth grade, he had entered a dangerous zone at 6-foot-2 and nearly 400 pounds. His father's health complications toward the end of his life only heightened the fears about Biggie's future.

Carl Swanigan Jr. knew something had to change for the young man who loved basketball.

"He had the moves, but he just couldn't move," he said.

Carl Jr. knew he had missed his chance. He had signed a letter of intent with Ole Miss in 2004 but never competed for the Rebels because he dropped out of high school prior to what would have been his freshman season in college. He enrolled in multiple prep schools as he tried to regain his eligibility to compete at the Division I level, but he got shot in the face by a friend in 2006, he said, an incident that cost Carl Jr. his right eye.

Caleb Swanigan liked sweets -- a lot. And when he was young, his weight ballooned. Courtesy of Roosevelt Barnes "I think that's one of the things that stopped me," he said.

He did not want his little brother to miss his chance, too.

Caleb Swanigan could not be left alone with food, because he would eat -- and eat and eat. Courtesy of Roosevelt Barnes After Swanigan's mother decided to move from Utah to Texas, again in search of stability, Carl Swanigan Jr. called Roosevelt Barnes, his former AAU coach in Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Biggie needed help, he told him.

Please.

"My mom was moving to Houston, and to me, I felt this was the best situation," said Carl Swanigan Jr., who is 12 years older than the Purdue sophomore. "Biggie is spoiled. He's the only kid that's been with my mom for years. I knew he would gain more weight if he went to Houston. He just would have gotten bigger."

Barnes, an influential sports agent who once called Ndamukong Suh a client and was a member of Purdue's 1980 Final Four squad, agreed to bring Swanigan to Fort Wayne if he could raise him as a son and adopt the 13-year-old. Swanigan moved to live with a man he'd met only a few times as a kid hanging around his older brother. Swanigan told Barnes that he'd never spent more than a year at the same school because of all the moves. He wanted stability. Barnes could grant that wish.

But it did not take long for Barnes to recognize the difficulties ahead.

"The first day he was there, I told him to get up in the morning and eat breakfast," Barnes said. "When I came downstairs, there was a big, giant box of Wheaties on the table. The whole box was gone, and the whole gallon of milk was gone. I said, 'What happened?' He said, 'You told me to eat.' I said, 'I didn't mean the whole box.'"

Later, Barnes would find a stack of pizza boxes in a utility room he rarely checked.

"I remember that," Swanigan said. "I just knew sometimes he'd look in the trash can and he would say something [if he found them]."

But Swanigan craved the structure Barnes offered. He just needed time to embrace the new responsibilities with a new guardian in a new home and a new lifestyle.

Barnes, whom Swanigan calls Dad, took him to a cardiologist to gauge his capacity to endure stressful workouts.

After doctors cleared Swanigan, Barnes took him to the gym and challenged him with workouts he used to evolve into a three-sport standout at Purdue (football, basketball and baseball) and a 10th-round pick of the Detroit Lions in 1982. Barnes said he knew Swanigan would rise because he engaged every drill. He never said no. Although the 360-pound teenager needed an extra minute or two to complete each drill, he had the attitude and intellect of a pro, Barnes said.

When they ran 17s -- 17 sprints from sideline to sideline -- he could see the youngster's heart.

Once Swanigan started working out, and focused on getting into shape, the results came. Randy Belice/NBAE via Getty Images "When you're in excellent shape, you can do it in a minute, with a minute's rest," Barnes said. "When we first started doing it, it used to take Biggie 3 minutes and 50 seconds to do it. The thing that impressed me was that he never quit."

Barnes addressed Swanigan's eating habits. More cooked meals, less fast food. Fewer sweets. The occasional pizza. A bowl of cereal, not the entire box.

"Something really small since we always practice at 2 p.m. I don't like eating big before practice, so I never really have a lunch. It's more of just fruit or something like that."

Dinner?

"I always try to make sure I get protein and just a good range of vegetables. I'm not too big on starches."

Haas, Purdue's 7-foot-2, 290-pound center, not only challenges Swanigan in practice, he also blocks him when it's time to eat. If he catches Swanigan piling an unhealthy entrée onto his plate, he'll tease him with an "Ahhhhh, Biggie!" and the sophomore will return the favor if he sees Haas gobbling junk. As big men, their bodies demand more care, Haas said. Bad food ruins their oversized engines and extends recovery time.

"You don't want to put regular gas in a Lamborghini," Haas said. "As a very fine-tuned machine, you have less room for error as a big guy. Whenever you eat like crap as a big guy, you're gonna feel like crap when you're on the court. It'll last one or two days, so it's a little different from a 5-10 point guard like P.J. Thompson, who can smash down on [Buffalo Wild Wings] every night and it'll be no big deal."

The NBA is a big deal to Swanigan. He never followed college basketball as a kid because he never expected to qualify for college. But he loved the NBA. He followed Kobe Bryant and Carmelo Anthony. In a few months, he could join Melo at the next level.

Last summer, in fact, he declared for the NBA draft. League officials told him to work on his body.

He'd lost the weight, but now the big man had to sculpt his frame. He did, and now the Big Ten must deal with the monster in the paint who has made 58 percent of his shots inside the arc and hit 10 of 21 spot-up jumpers, per Synergy data.

"He's continued to improve his body," Painter said. "He's been selective as a perimeter shooter. He was a good defensive rebounder last year. His improvement lies in his ability to go every single time."

He proved that in the overtime loss to Minnesota and the late-night workout that followed.

Sometimes Swanigan reflects on his journey, which he often omits in conversations with teammates and friends. But he calls his experiences -- the eating issues, the stops in shelters, the constant relocation, the family turmoil, the academic woes -- "fuel" for his improvement.

There is a difference in Swanigan, however, that the box scores will never capture. They're the smiles and playful moments evident in practices and games.

After the trials and obstacles, Swanigan discovered the other side of life's potholes: joy.

"I'm having a lot of fun," he said. "I'm in a good spot right now. I'm trying to enjoy it. Last year they told me I didn't do that well. I wanted it so much, and I was working so hard, that I didn't allow myself to enjoy the things around me. I'm trying to be more open with people and not just stay closed off."

Carsen Edwards coming of age for Purdue at the right time

Brian Neubert / GoldandBlack.com / January 23, 2017

Talented as Carsen Edwards is and has impactful as he's been early in his Purdue career, there was always going to be some inconsistency there. It was inevitable.

For the dynamic freshman to best use his many gifts as a basketball play, Boilermaker coach Matt Painter has needed aggressiveness from him. It's part of what's always defined him.

But aggressiveness — and Edwards, really, has known no other way — and inexperience can be a toxic mix. And so through the first half of this season, there'd be situations where every two or three rights might be paired with a wrong, that inconsistency that there was simply no way around for Purdue as Edwards proved to be too good too early to not play a major role on an otherwise already well-established team and lineup.

The freshman has been good for Purdue this season — good enough to cement himself in the starting lineup where there otherwise seemed little opportunity to do so prior, good enough to make him a clear contender for the Big Ten's All-Freshman team a few months from now.

Lately, though, things have been clicking for the 6-foot, 190-pounder from the Houston area at the right time.

His 12-point game at Michigan State Tuesday night was his fifth double-digit scoring game in eight Big Ten games.

After four- and eight-point games in Purdue's win over Wisconsin and its loss at Iowa, Edwards has taken off.

In the past three games — all Boilermaker wins — Edwards is averaging 13 points on 16-of-27 shooting. In the past three games, he's shooting 50 percent from three-point range. For the Big Ten season, he's shooting 38.3 from three-point range, 46.2 overall, up from 29.3 and 37.2, respectively.

Turnovers have been a nominal issue. At Michigan State, he committed none — no Purdue guard was guilty — while handing out three assists in 32 minutes, which tied a season-high.

Incidentally, the two games Edwards' minutes have hit their high-water mark: Notre Dame and Michigan - two of Purdue's biggest wins.

Both of those games came away from Mackey Arena, as did his 12-point game in the Boilermakers' narrow win over Ohio State and his 21-point eruption against Auburn in the title game of the Cancun Challenge.

"I just try to stay consistent," Edwards said of playing on the road, prior to the Michigan State game. "I know it's a different environment, but I try to just block everything out. I'm still learning, still experiencing new things. I'm just trying to be consistent, regardless of where we are, just trying to be consistent and do my job."

It's been an adjustment for Edwards guarding away from the ball — Purdue flipped it against Illinois and Penn State, putting P.J. Thompson on the 2 and Edwards on the 1 — but he's been an impact defender for Purdue, too. His 19 steals this season are second only to Dakota Mathias' 20 and no one on the Boilermaker roster has the ability, which he's shown in flashes, to turn defense into offense than Edwards, who has so often looked the part of a one-man fast break.

The biggest development, perhaps, for Edwards lately: He's finishing at the rim. He's been inconsistent this season on his point-blank layups — layups might not be the right way to put it, given that some have been challenged or otherwise difficult. But at Michigan State, he attacked in transition and from halfcourt sets and made every shot he got going to the basket. He's shooting 63 percent from two-point range the past three games.

"I think I've played all right," Edwards said prior to Michigan State. "I'm just trying to do my job, honestly. I'm just trying to improve on doing my job more and more every game and eliminating mistakes. I'm just going to continue to watch film and seeing what I need to continue to keep working on."

"I'm just trying to take good shots. That's something I'm working on as well, understanding time (and place) and when shots need to be taken."

Much improved Dakota Mathias is the glue for Purdue

Gregg Doyel / Indianapolis Star / January 8, 2017

Dakota Mathias was better than that. Well, he thought he was better than that. But his playing time dropped as a sophomore, so he used his end-of-the-year meeting with Purdue coach Matt Painter last season to find out:

How do I get more minutes?

Ask a question, get an answer. In this case, it was a long answer. Painter gave Mathias a list, and Mathias was taking notes and studying it and then changing his summer plans. He stayed on campus for what they call the "Maymester:" the time on the school calendar when most athletes get away. Mathias couldn't get away.

He had too many things to work on.

"My defense, my agility, get into better shape," Mathias was telling me Sunday evening, after the fruits of his labor helped No. 20 Purdue throttle No. 11 Wisconsin 66-55, a victory that ...

Oh, sorry. Mathias isn't done telling me what he had to work on after last season.

"My ball-handling, my speed, creating my shot ..."

It's a list, as I was saying. And it's not that Mathias wasn't good at any of those things. He was. He just wasn't good enough, not to get the minutes and make the impact he felt he could make at Purdue. So after averaging just 19 minutes per game as a sophomore, he got leaner, stronger, faster. His ball-handling, not exactly a weakness, became more of a strength. His defense, which was exactly a weakness, became sound.

"They used to have to hide me (defensively)," Mathias said, smiling at himself. "Now I'm defending some of the best guys in the Big Ten."

Oh, and his shooting? Dakota Mathias could always shoot the ball better than almost anybody at Purdue. And now he's shooting it better than almost anybody in college basketball.

Put it all together, as Mathias has done, and you're looking at a radically improved, indispensable player for a Purdue team that looks to be the Big Ten's best Final Four candidate. On Sunday, you were looking at a guy who had eight points, seven assists and four rebounds, and who led Purdue's remarkably stingy perimeter defense. Wisconsin entered the game shooting 39.5 percent on 3-pointers and making 7.5 per game in league play; Purdue held the Badgers to 2-for-14 shooting (14.3 percent) behind the arc.

Mathias wasn't the sole reason Purdue beat Wisconsin. Nobody's saying that. Caleb Swanigan had another double-double, 18 points and 13 rebounds, though he was unable to stop Wisconsin's Ethan Happ (17 points), and had almost as many turnovers by himself (eight) as Wisconsin had as a team (nine).

Swanigan has become one of the best players in America, but this was not one of his better games. Think about how high that bar is: 18 points, 13 rebounds, not one of his better games. Swanigan's backup and occasional twin tower, 7-2 Isaac Haas, had 13 points in 18 minutes, when Purdue was going to him and going to him and going to him.

"They're really in a bind," Painter said of the Wisconsin defense — of any defense — that has to deal with Isaac Haas on the low block. "He's just going to have to miss in a one-on-one shot. When he posts deep and keeps things simple and doesn't overdrizzle, you're just at his mercy."

Pretty much the same can be said for the rest of the Big Ten as it relates to Purdue: It's really in a bind. And at the Boilermakers' mercy. What Painter has created this season is a team Wisconsin coach Greg Gard decided is as good as Painter's 2010 group of Robbie Hummel, E'Twaun Moore and JaJuan Johnson that won 29 games and reached the Sweet 16.

Painter has a team that can beat you any which way. Purdue is still just too big for most folks, Swanigan and Haas and 6-8 small forward Vince Edwards, but now Purdue can shoot you down from the perimeter as well. Mathias (49.3 percent entering Sunday), Carmel's Ryan Cline (45.1 percent) and Edwards (44.1 percent) rank among the Big Ten's top 10 in 3-point accuracy, and Brebeuf's P.J. Thompson (41.2 percent) is just outside the list.

Mathias is the glue. He has replaced Rapheal Davis as the team's top perimeter defender. He leads the team in assists (4.1 per game). He is fourth in rebounding (3.7 rpg), fifth in scoring (9.8 ppg), second in assist-to-turnover ratio (3-to-1).

Mathias also is the team's most dangerous shooter, its only guard who can get a shot for himself at a moment's notice. That moment came late in the first half Sunday with the shot clock ticking down — "Six, five, four," the Paint Crew was pointing out — and Mathias at the top of the key and crossing over Wisconsin's Bronson Koenig before drilling a 3-pointer for Purdue's first double-digit lead at 25-15.

Afterward, Painter was nodding before I could finish my question. He heard the words "Dakota Mathias" and "improved" and he was nodding and then he was saying:

"Dakota's been great," Painter said. "Where he's improved the most is defensively. As a coach, you can't have enough people you trust. A lot of times, players don't understand that. Can the coaches trust you? Can you follow your assignment? Just be accountable. He's gotten better. There were some tough lessons. Last year his minutes went down.

"The true testament to a good player is when a coach can't take you out. There's some guys who didn't play as much today as I would have liked, but you just didn't feel right taking some guys out — and (Mathias) is one of those guys."

Mathias played 37 minutes on Sunday. He is averaging 30.4 minutes on the season, second to Swanigan (31.4 mpg). He looked tired when I caught up with him after the game Sunday — Mathias also was the first Purdue player on the court before the game, shooting about 150 jumpers before his teammates joined him — but he looked happy. This whole thing, remember, it started after last season when Mathias asked Painter a question.

Now he has become Purdue perimeter answer.

Swanigan has turned Purdue into must-watch TV

Matt Norlander | CBSSports | Jan. 5, 2017

May 7, 2015, was the date that changed the direction of Purdue's program.

Boilermakers coach Matt Painter was hosting a recruit on an official visit. He had 12 scholarship players for the upcoming season, meaning one spot was open. This particular recruit looked to be the guy who was going to get that scholarship offer.

And then a twist came. As the recruit was on campus, Painter heard about an in-conference de-commitment from a five-star McDonald's All-American. It was a player Painter was familiar with, sure: He'd only see him play dozens of games and dedicated hundreds of hours and thousands of travel miles to recruiting him. Caleb Swanigan, Mr. Indiana Basketball for 2015, one of the best players to come out of the state in the past decade, was walking back his verbal commitment on Michigan State. He pledged to Tom Izzo's program not even a month prior. But something turned Swanigan, and now Purdue was expected to bring him in.

If Painter could do it, Swanigan would become the first Mr. Basketball to commit to Purdue since Glenn Robinson -- one of the all-time great Boilermakers -- in 1991. That would be six years before Swanigan was born.

Recruiting isn't for the faint of heart. Painter immediately knew the player he was hosting on an official visit (who's since gone on to a mid-major program) couldn't be the priority, not with Swanigan now back on the market. Besides, Purdue was for a time considered the favorite to land Swanigan. What's more, his legal guardian, Roosevelt Barnes, was an alum, someone who was drafted into the NFL out of Purdue in 1982.

It was a hard, perhaps harsh move to make on that recruit, but pretty much any coach trying to keep his job at a power-conference program would have done the same thing. It was the practical move. Less than two weeks after balking on Michigan State, Swanigan swore to Purdue. And now, everything is falling into place for Swanigan, Painter and the program.

If you've missed it, the sophomore big man is putting up numbers we haven't seen at the college basketball level since Tim Duncan was at Wake Forest.

Purdue, which faces an interesting game at Ohio State on Thursday night, is 12-3 and has the realistic goal of winning the Big Ten this season. Swanigan, who is emerging as one of the most dominant two-way players in America, is the catalyst for the program's amelioration. He's averaging 18.5 points, 13.0 rebounds and 2.9 assists. He's also developing a fun and unusual habit of accruing 20-20 games. The 19-year-old already has four games wherein he's scored at least 20 points and grabbed 20 rebounds, the most recent a 28-22 effort against Minnesota on Sunday.

His stats are flirting with the cartoonish, in terms of modern college hoops. Seven times this season a player has had a 20-20 game -- Swanigan has four of them, and the modern record is in sight. The most 20-20 games in a season since 1994 is six by Santa Clara's John Bryant in 2008-09.

Swanigan has also had a 20-20-5 (assists) game, doing that in Purdue's season-opener. The only other players in the past decade to go 20-20-5: LSU's Ben Simmons and Oklahoma's Blake Griffin. Both of them went No. 1 in the draft.

Against Norfolk State on Dec. 21, Swanigan became the first player this season to have a 30-20-2 game; there have been just six 30-20-2 games in college basketball in the past five-plus seasons. The only player aside from Swanigan to do it and come from a major conference: Kansas' Thomas Robinson. He was a top-five NBA pick.

Swanigan also had consecutive 20-20 games, on Dec. 19 and 21, and thus became the third player in the past two decades (Griffin and Hofstra's Rokas Gustys) to achieve the feat. Swanigan's four 20-20 games doubles all 20-20 games by all other Big Ten players combined since the mid-1990s.

"Losing [NBA pick A.J. Hammons] and things like that, we were going to need a guy down there to pick up the load," Swanigan said. "Defensively it's been a lot easier for me, just going through it before and knowing the level you have to play at."

If Swanigan keeps on pace with an 18/13/2 average, he'll join Griffin and Tim Duncan as the only players in the past 23 seasons to finish a season with that average. Going for 18 and 13 might not seem monumental, but averaging 13 rebounds is no longer common at the college level; he's going to crush Purdue's single-season rebound record (352) this year. The guy who holds the record is Joe

Barry Carroll -- also a former No. 1 pick. Based on a plausible 35-game season for Purdue, Swanigan is tracking to be the second college basketball player in the past 20 seasons to score 600 points, grab 400 rebounds and dish 100 assists in one season.

Fifty and 60 years ago, a handful of players put up 30-30 games, but those days are long gone. So when you see a college guy come along and start dropping 20-20 with ease, it makes you pause and appreciate him even more.

If you're wondering how he compares to the aforementioned Glenn Robinson, the Big Dog played two years at Purdue and averaged a dominating 27.5 points, 1.9 assists, and on the boards? Nearly 10 per game. That's good, but he was not quite the rebounding force Swanigan is proving to be. Swanigan is averaging more defensive rebounds now (9.9) than Robinson's total rebounds average (9.7).

Swanigan's 12 double-doubles are tops in the country, as is his defensive rebounds clip. He snares caroms on 34 percent of Purdue's defensive possessions, which is a higher rate than any player on any power-conference team (by far) in the history of KenPom.com's database.

All this adds up to an All-American campaign and a clear-cut top-five candidate for national Player of the Year to this point. No one has averaged 15 or more rebounds in a season in Division I men's basketball since 1980. Swanigan might do it.

Though Purdue's been fairly steady, on a national level it hasn't been a must-watch program for most of Painter's tenure. Nevertheless, since he got there in 2005, the Boilers have made eight NCAA Tournaments and will go to their ninth this season. Hammons, a traditional 7-foot center, was a good player in recent years, and the Robbie Hummel-E'Twaun Moore-JaJuan Johnson teams of the late-aughts were the best Purdue teams Painter's ever had.

But this group has become so watchable because Swanigan has turned into a stat monster, and on a certain level, it's captivating to see a guy landlord around the rim. What makes Purdue different is Swanigan can play the 4 or the 5, and so he goes "small" when the 7-foot-2 spruce tree that is Isaac Haas is on the floor. Swanigan is a four-level threat: he can maneuver in the post, is confident from mid-range (59 percent on all his 2s), has foul-shooting ability (77 percent) and is a 41-percent 3-point shooter.

"I feel comfortable on the perimeter. I feel comfortable on all three levels on the floor and I try to make the right basketball decision on every single play," Swanigan said.

He shoots 3s but is selective about it, having taken just 27 this season. Swanigan leads the team in shots but is still efficient in doing so (a solid 117.5 offensive rating). He allows Purdue to have flexibility in its offense.

"He's very good at playing off other people," Painter said. "He's always able to pass the basketball. He's clearly aware of double teams."

His overall defense has been markedly better, too. When he's guarding a man one-on-one, opponents are shooting 20 percent outside of the paint against him, according to Purdue's statistics. Teams might have a "plan," but he's going to win more caroms than not, and if Haas is on the floor, then you've got to worry about Swanigan on the perimeter or in the high post 10 seconds later. Swanigan said he can feel the way teams are scheming against him differently, but nothing anyone can do is stopping him.

Plus, Purdue's able to space itself well with shooters -- and Swanigan. That brings opposing bigs out with him. The Boilermakers are flirting with offensive heights not seen in almost two decades at the program. The team's gone for 80 or more points in five straight games, and if it hits 80 against Ohio State on Thursday, it'll be the first time since 1997 Purdue's done it six straight times. Purdue's also won nine games by 20 or more points. The only teams to win more games by 20-plus? Sixth-ranked Kentucky and seventh-ranked West Virginia.

Swanigan had a really nice freshman season (10.2 points, 8.3 rebounds). He was one of the 20 best first-year players in America last season, but that wasn't good enough to warrant being a one-and-done guy. There was never a real thought he'd go to the NBA.

"He's a very intelligent person but he's also guarded," Painter said. "He's not going to open up to just anyone. With that, he's very business-like for a young person. He's going to shoot extra, he's going to lift extra, he's going to come and watch film. He's done a lot of things a lot of big-bodied guys won't do. He's made some sacrifices that are very hard to do, in terms of lifting, running extra -- during the season -- and there's already enough demands in the season."

For someone as big and naturally gifted at basketball as Swanigan is, the dividends have paid off this year because he's committed to consistency and is as aggressive crashing the offensive glass as he is hungry on the other end.

"I've always prided myself on rebounding, trying to be in the best shape as possible," he said.

His workout regimen is evidence of it. In the fall semester, Swanigan had only two in-person classes to attend, the rest online. So because of this, he spent more time working out than anything else. Two hours of getting up shots, an hour of lifting, an hour's worth of practice, and post-practice workouts were common as well. Swanigan, who is 6-foot-9 and between 245 and 250 pounds, is now down from 13 to 10 percent body fat.

"The biggest jump for him as been a continual improvement of his body, and I think that allows him to have more energy, to play harder," Painter said. "He's really doing a good job of trying to literally go after every rebound, sprint back on defense every time."

He does speed lifting and unconventional weight training. This has helped him get off the ground quicker. He squats and does bench press, but not as much as most others on the team. There's been an emphasis on working auxiliary muscles; getting him stronger where he can't even feel his strength. He's improved his lift speed and hip mobility in big ways since stepped on campus 18 months ago. He no longer struggles to pick up his feet. His natural running motion is now ... natural.

Most impressively, Swanigan is experienced but young for his age, so to speak. He should be a freshman. In 2014, he reclassified to the class of 2015, moving ahead his progress for a year. This mammoth season combined with his young age has taken him from late-second-round prospect he was last year to a guy who could put himself into the first round this year.

"He's showing he can play a role at that level," Painter said. "Sometimes guys don't like hearing that, but guys playing roles [the] past four or five years in the NBA are now making $10-12 million doing it."

Swanigan's aware of how good he's been, but he refuses to say he's the best player in the Big Ten or anything like that.

"It's one of those things where it will be really special if you can add winning to it, to go to a Final Four," he said. "In the moment it won't be as important. ... I feel like we can win the Big Ten just because of what we have this year. Indiana caught fire last year, won a couple of games and just kept rolling. I feel like I'm the best player for my team. I fit well for where I'm at. It's just the spot I'm in. ... I don't want to speak for anyone else."

He doesn't have to. Swanigan has by far been the best player in the Big Ten this season, and if this keeps up, he'll wind up having one of the best seasons in the history of the conference.

Purdue's Isaac Haas playing for sister who has epilepsy

Dana O'Neil | ESPN.com | Nov. 30, 2016

When their son, Isaac, was a baby, Rachel and Danny Haas trekked two hours to an Atlanta-area Target, the only place that carried size 5T clothes with snaps. Isaac wasn't 5; he was barely a toddler. In fact he was still in diapers, but he had outgrown baby sizes, and his parents weren't interested in wrestling their big boy for every diaper change. They needed the snaps.

As their boy grew -- and grew and grew and grew -- Rachel and Danny soon realized that their Alabama home wasn't going to do. So just as the Howards did for Clifford the Big Red Dog, the Haas family retrofitted everything to suit Isaac: The doorways are 7-foot-5, the shower heads loiter somewhere near the ceiling, and Isaac slept in a king-sized bed ... diagonally.

Fast forward to Isaac's freshman year at Purdue. After he suffered through a particularly lousy free-throw performance at a game in Maui, coach Matt Painter carted Isaac off to a small gym to work on his foul shooting. The two returned in time to join the team for a buffet meal. After Isaac left, one of his teammates looked at his coach in awe, "That was the most impressive thing I've ever seen." Perplexed, Painter asked if he meant shooting the extra free throws. "No," his player replied. "He just ate 40 chicken strips. I counted them."

The tales of tall Isaac Haas truly read like tall tales.

And let's get this out of the way, too.

Seven feet, two inches.

Twenty two.

Yes.

Those would be the answers to the three-part question that Isaac hears at every mall, restaurant and airport in America: How tall are you? What size shoe do you wear? Do you play basketball?

So yes, Isaac Haas, all 86 inches and 290 pounds of him, is a big man, like double-take-when-he-walks-in-a-room big.

Except the measure of this man is a lot more than just his height.

"After Erin would have one of her seizures, Isaac would sneak into her room sometimes to comfort her," Rachel Haas said. "I'd find him there, holding her like she was a baby."

SHE WAS THREE months old the first time they realized something wasn't right. By then, by the time the epileptic seizures became obvious, doctors figured Erin had suffered countless infantile spasms that went unnoticed by her parents.

Epilepsy is hardly uncommon -- one in 26 Americans will develop epilepsy or recurring seizures in their lifetime -- but it covers a wide spectrum. Some people can be treated with medications; others need surgery. Erin Haas has what's called intractable epilepsy, which means neither drugs nor the countless brain surgeries she has had over the years can bring her seizures under control.

Isaac didn't understand all of that when his sister was first born. He was 4. He knew only that something wasn't quite right, and his little sister was getting an awful lot of attention, certainly a lot more than he was. He didn't like that very much, either.

When she figured he could at least grasp some of it, Rachel Haas sat Isaac down to explain what was wrong, that Erin wasn't likely to get better, and that the Haas family's new normal would be anything but.

Along with multiple brain surgeries, the most recent in 2012, Erin underwent facial reconstruction necessitated by face-first falls during seizures. Once during dinner she fell so hard onto a hard oak table, the table bounced and moved an entire half inch. Erin jokes she has more stitches than most motocross riders, and for years Rachel feared the bruising on her daughter's forehead would never subside. Before Erin's first surgery, a sudden noise would trigger a seizure, and if Erin expected a noise that didn't come, she'd also have a seizure. Consequently the family's house is quiet and still, the phones all turned to vibrate, the toilet lids made so they don't slam.

All that, and the reality that this would be forever, is what Rachel tried to explain to the boy who loved his baby sister so much that, when she was a few weeks old, he insisted his mom bring her to school for show-and-tell.

"After 30 minutes of me explaining it to him and him crying, he never complained about it again," Rachel said. "It caused him to mature a lot earlier in different ways. He's always silly, in a good kid way, but our entire lives have been stressful situations. He can handle stress like nobody else."

Rather than be jealous of the attention Erin commanded, Isaac decided to be his little sister's champion. Better yet, he would be her hero. Maybe subconsciously at least, Isaac also recognized that by excelling at something, he might swing some of that attention back his way.

So he started to play sports.

Isaac Haas is the kid who looks like a redwood standing in the middle of a hedgerow. So Isaac and basketball were a perfect marriage, perhaps a little too perfect. Understandably he dominated the games and not surprisingly, other kids didn't like that so much. Desperate to find something to make the superior-sized player feel inferior, they zeroed in on his big feet and his big ears.

"Well, he did have big ears," Rachel said. "We used to joke, 'the better to hear you with, my dear.' But we told him if that's all they got, let 'em have it. If the best they have is your ears and feet, you're good to go."

As his game blossomed -- and his head grew into proportion with his ears -- the town bullies didn't have so much to say. Isaac started running with the better summer league teams, attracting college scouts to tiny Hokes Bluff, Alabama (population 4,000). With his recruiting ranking rising and his stats improving (he averaged 18.5 points and 11 rebounds as a high school junior), Isaac originally committed to Wake Forest, choosing the Demon Deacons over UAB, Purdue and a host of other schools. But in the 11th hour he opted not to sign with the Demon Deacons, stunning everyone with his decision to go to Purdue.

Isaac said he liked the school and Painter's reputation for coaching big men, but he also saw the cultural shift as an important challenge. Reared in that small town and happily cocooned by his family, Isaac liked the idea of going away for college and experiencing a place completely different -- even snowy Indiana.

At least that's what he thought he wanted.

"Oh man, I was so homesick," Isaac said. "Getting away from mom's nest was a little harder than I thought."

Rock bottom came one night in the first semester. Isaac called home, telling his mom he didn't think he could stick it out. They talked for nearly an hour, and Rachel thought she had quelled the panic. Except no sooner had Isaac hung up when he called back, saying the same thing.

"I basically told him to suck it up," she said.

WHEN ISAAC ARRIVED in West Lafayette, Indiana, his physical presence was imposing but his stamina not so much. In games, he'd come out of the gates on fire but tire easily. Painter offered much the same advice to his freshman: Suck it up.

In high school, it was so simple. There weren't a whole lot of 7-foot-2 kids walking around, even fewer who were as strong as Isaac. He would barely break a sweat, score a bunch of points, win a game and celebrate with a big pizza. He figured if he got even bigger and stronger, he could follow the same path in college.

"He would make these comments to me and I'd think, are you serious?" Painter said. "He'd say, 'Aw look at me, I'm stacked. I'm up to 315, 320 [pounds]. I had to explain to him that no, you have to lean down to play to the best of your ability.'"

Out went the late-night runs to Papa John's and the wowing teammates with meals of 40 chicken strips. Over time, Isaac learned to maximize his size and use it to his advantage. Where, for example, others have to use an arm bar to defend an opponent, Haas needs merely to place the palm of one hand on someone's back to have the same effect.

"I've done a better job growing into my body and understanding my body, the conditioning needs, the rebounding and physical aspects you have to go into detail with as a big guy," he said. "It's like coach always says, you don't put regular gas in a Lamborghini. You have to use premium. It's about the right time and work."

As Isaac learned the proper balance, he had a buffer. A.J. Hammons, two years Isaac's senior and only two inches smaller, gobbled up minutes and awards, allowing Isaac to grow into his role on the team.

Hammons finished his eligibility last season, and as the season ended, Painter suggested that perhaps Isaac would like to weigh his NBA draft stock as well.

"His response was, 'Next year is my year,' which I thought was pretty mature on his part," Painter said. "He's been the best backup in the country, but he hasn't started; he hasn't carried that weight. This is his year."

So far it looks that way. Isaac has nearly doubled his production, averaging 16.5 points and 4.8 rebounds per game (9.8 and 3.7 last season).

THE GOAL IS so close now. Like virtually every other player suiting up for a college basketball game, Isaac long has dreamed of being an NBA player. Isaac admits he gets a warm feeling in his stomach when he thinks about it.

His dream stretches beyond simply stepping on an NBA court. He wants to help Erin.

Now 16, Isaac's sister attends the same public high school her big brother did, but she is developmentally delayed and struggles socially. Her social circle consists mostly of her cousins. Her big brother, as he once hoped, is her hero and best friend. Erin loves seeing Isaac on television and rooting for the Boiler-makers, but her life has limits. Erin struggles with math, doesn't have the same filters that the rest of us do and because of the severity and frequency of her seizures, won't be able to live alone.

Finding a cure for epilepsy remains elusive. Research is critically underfunded, and the disease, once viewed as a mental health issue or even possession by the devil, is still very much misunderstood. Isaac hopes to change that and dreams of spearheading a foundation that will raise money for research.

"I want to be able to provide for her so she never has to worry about anything ever again," Isaac said. "But I also want to find a cure. My sole purpose, honestly, is to help Erin have the best life she possibly can."

Yes, the tales of tall Isaac Haas are pretty tall tales, but the measure of the man is far greater than how tall he measures.

Familiar pain behind Purdue's Spike Albrecht

Nathan Baird | Lafayette Journal & Courier | Nov. 8, 2016

Spike Albrecht lay sprawled on the Mackey Arena floor for a moment, mumbled something that cracked up nearby teammates, then gritted his teeth and lifted himself up.

Blue-collar play is a trademark of the Purdue basketball program. Players expect to occasionally hit the deck in pursuit of a loose ball or from physical play in practice.

The other Boilermakers, however, have taken to calling Albrecht the "old man" of the team. Considering he's 24 and coming off two hip surgeries that nearly ended his career, Albrecht understands.

"Every time I go down, I think everyone holds their breath thinking, 'Oh man, this is it,'" said Albrecht, who joined the Boilermakers as a graduate transfer in the offseason. "A lot of times I trip. I stumble, I fall and I do look kind of old when I'm getting up.

"But I'm fine. I'm not too concerned about the injury anymore. I'm just going out and playing freely."

Three days later, Chuck Albrecht watched his youngest son play in Purdue's exhibition game against Southern Indiana. From the Mackey Arena parents' section he sent a group text to family members who couldn't attend.

"Spike's moving really well" — a message of optimism and relief that the pain that plagued the guard's final two seasons at Michigan may be behind him.

When the game ended and Chuck Albrecht stood to leave, the same sharp pain his son once felt fired down the father's leg and up into his lower back.

Basketball has blessed men in the Albrecht family for generations. Chuck's father, Charles "Hook" Albrecht, played briefly at Indiana. Chuck Albrecht played at Vincennes and Purdue Calumet and in men's leagues into his 40s. Spike Albrecht was a freshman Final Four hero and a former co-MVP with the Wolverines.

All were also cursed with a painful genetic condition, eventually diagnosed in Spike Albrecht as a hip impingement. Spike corrected his with surgery. Although it cost him most of last season at Michigan, it's the reason he can now play at Purdue.

Spike Albrecht also had the surgery because he didn't want to one day end up like Chuck, who at age 55 hopes to soon undergo double hip replacement, just as his father did before him.

In the meantime, Chuck Albrecht manages the "terrible, constant pain" while watching his son finish his career on his own terms.

"We watch every game, and we're so thrilled he's out there," Chuck Albrecht said. "To see him play well is just an added bonus."

One doesn't need an X-ray to notice the physical similarities between Spike and Chuck Albrecht. Neither would "pass the eyeball test," to use Spike's phrase, as a college basketball player. Father and son share a smaller frame and similar facial features.

Steven Albrecht said his father and brother bite their nails the same way. They'll send the same response in group-text threads at the same time. They laugh the same way at the same jokes and point at each other while doing it. They're both quick to make friends with strangers in any setting.

"He's a spitting image of his dad," Tammy Albrecht says of her son, who she refers to only by his real first name of Michael. "He plays a lot like Chuck on the court. When something's not going right, he knows where to go next."

Chuck and Tammy met at Gary's Lew Wallace High School, where Chuck's hip problems first flared up. They continued through college. He believes he could more easily play through the pain because, as a junior college and National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics athlete, the demands on his body weren't as great as what Spike faced in the Big Ten Conference.

Chuck Albrecht also managed what his doctors referred to only as "inflammation" with regular cortisone shots. If he knows how many he had, he won't say, confessing only, "It was way too many."

"At the time it took the pain away, but it was probably the worst thing I could have done, because cortisone eats up soft tissue," Chuck Albrecht said. "My hip joints are bone on bone. That's exactly what I didn't want to happen to Spike."

Chuck Albrecht stayed active in backyard sports with his children — sons Steven, Chachi and Spike and daughter Hannah — and played in recreational men's leagues and YMCA pickup games well into adulthood.

Around age 40, the rest of the family noticed him slowing down. He would struggle to walk around the house after games. Tammy said she and Hannah encouraged Chuck to stop playing.

"We've known for a long time our dad's hips are basically nonexistent," Steven Albrecht said.

The family knew Spike inherited his father's hips, as well. The only question was how bad it would be, and how soon it would hit.

'Impressive'

The storybook beginning of Spike Albrecht's Michigan career made its ending even more unfortunate.

Albrecht had only one other scholarship offer — from Appalachian State — when he came out of Northfield Mount Hermon, a Massachusetts prep school. Wolverines coach John Beilein needed another guard for the 2012 class and called another incoming recruit, Glenn Robinson Jr., to ask about his scrappy Amateur Athletic Union teammate. Robinson said Albrecht ran the team without much of a scoring presence in the AAU season, but would put up 30 points in his high school games.

Beilein broke down five of Albrecht's tapes over two days.

"I told my AD, you're either going to fire me or I'm going to look like a genius, but I'm going to bring this kid in," Beilein said.

When Spike Albrecht had 17 points at half-time of the national championship game the following spring, Beilein looked like a genius.

Two years later, when starting point guard Derrick Walton Jr. went down with injury, Spike Albrecht ascended into a central role. He responded with his best season, averaging 7.5 points and 3.9 assists and sharing Michigan's Most Valuable Player award.

While he didn't complain, those close to the program knew Albrecht was toiling in pain — and a little regret.

The twinges of pain Spike Albrecht first felt in high school only worsened under the strain of college competition. Additionally, he suffered from a constant catching sensation in his hip flexor. The X-rays he underwent at the end of his sophomore season revealed the startling extent of the damage.

Chuck Albrecht said the X-ray showed the ball of the femur bone that fit into Spike's hip, round in most people, was oval. It explained why Spike couldn't rotate his hips correctly, either when playing basketball or doing squats in the weight room. At some point in his life, Albrecht's body performed a sort of self-corrective surgery by fracturing the hip.

When Chuck Albrecht asked about doing an MRI, the doctor said he didn't need to see one. He knew the only way Albrecht could move with that damage was with a torn labrum.

"He told me Spike's hip impingement was 'impressive,'" Chuck Albrecht said. "I said, I don't understand what you mean by 'impressive.' He said, 'That's the medical term for severe.'"

Albrecht had a choice — get surgery to repair the torn labrum and hip impingement or play through the pain. His parents wanted him to have the surgery. Chuck said he feared a "Bo Jackson" scenario where his son would suffer permanent damage. But Spike put surgery off, believing he could gut it out through two more seasons.

As he fought his way through that junior season, he second-guessed that decision.

"A couple of times you'd go back and watch film and he damn near falls over because he would get a pinch," said Steven Albrecht, who was working in Ann Arbor, Mich., and living with his brother at the time. "His rotation in his hips was so bad. I've never seen anything like that."

Surgery instead came after Albrecht's junior year. He returned to the court within six months and began realizing his worst fears. He said he wasn't concerned that he couldn't perform as well as before. He worried instead that he would re-injure himself due to his lack of strength and an inability to move laterally.

"I was nowhere near ready to play," Albrecht said.

Albrecht came off the bench in eight games before announcing on Dec. 11 that he was retiring. However, even after returning late in the season to play on the Wolverines' scout team, Albrecht knew he could not return to the court for even a one-second ovation on senior night.

If he did so, Albrecht couldn't have received a medical hardship waiver for the season and played on as a graduate student.

'A lot of rust'

Purdue coach Matt Painter has long admired Albrecht's game. It inspired him in part to recruit P.J. Thompson, another smaller-than-average player known for playing with heart.

Albrecht and the Boilermakers filled mutual needs when he joined the program over the summer. At the time, however, Albrecht had not returned to fully competitive status. When he began working out with Purdue over the summer, Albrecht may have been pain-free, but the physical limitations caused a different kind of pain.

Steven Albrecht knew his brother wasn't himself yet when Purdue freshman Carsen Edwards swiped the ball from him while guarding him full-court. The older brother couldn't remember seeing anyone pick Spike so cleanly.

"I would get so mad when I'd go out there and I know I can play better than I was and I'm not moving like I'd like to," Spike Albrecht said. "That's something I've had to kind of grow up a little bit and have patience with. I get frustrated at times, especially this summer. As we've been moving along I feel I'm making strides in the right direction."

Painter and his staff told Albrecht they didn't want him playing his best basketball in July. They want him for March, where backcourt depth and Albrecht's deep NCAA tournament experience can both bolster a team with high expectations.

"This summer and in Spain he was getting all the rust off," junior guard Dakota Mathias said. "It was a lot of rust, but I think he's good now. He's been playing really well in practice. In the (intrasquad) scrimmage, he was good. He was moving well. A guy like that, with the basketball mind, he has to be able to pass and shoot; he's so key and important to our team."

Albrecht showed he may be ahead of schedule in the exhibition against Southern Indiana. He scored 13 points, making 3 of 4 from 3-point range, with four assists against one turnover in 24 minutes.

Most importantly, he said his body felt fine the next day.

"Everyone asks me, 'Do you feel normal?'" Spike Albrecht said. "I don't know because I haven't felt normal in so long I don't really know what that feels like. I just know I feel a lot better now than I did when I first got here in June and July.

"I have a feeling I'm going to continue to improve every day and continue to make strides."

Chuck Albrecht, stubborn like his son, won't take pain medication. As a result, he sometimes has trouble sleeping. The elder Albrecht also put off his hip surgery, though not by choice.

He had an operation scheduled for the fall at Rush University Medical Center in Chicago. However, doctors canceled the surgery when he showed an allergic reaction to a necessary anti-inflammatory medication.

So while Chuck Albrecht looks for another surgeon to perform the operation, he'll watch from the Mackey Arena bleachers, in a bit of pain but a lot of joy.

Tammy Albrecht said even with the surgery, her husband wouldn't miss any of his kids' games.

"I was just telling him at the exhibition game, I think I need to go get us some of those back cushions to sit on," Tammy Albrecht said. "He's not going to miss any of his kids' games."
