EUGENE F. KRANZ TOLEDO EXPRESS AIRPORT

Eugene F. Kranz Toledo Express Airport (TOL) serves as the region’s primary air cargo hub, handling significant freight operations with dedicated operators like Grand Aire that provide warehousing and aircraft handling services. A major component of the airport’s cargo activity centers on international shipments of auto parts, supporting Northwest Ohio’s strong automotive manufacturing base. The airport experienced substantial cargo growth between 2020 and 2021, ranking among the top U.S. airports for cargo tonnage during that period. In addition to cargo, Toledo Express also accommodates premium air freight, corporate aviation, and general aviation services. On the passenger side, TOL is a smaller airport with limited direct destinations and fewer daily flights than major hubs, primarily offering connections through airlines such as American, United, and Southwest. It also has a leisure focus, with Allegiant Air providing seasonal nonstop service to popular destinations including Orlando, Tampa, Fort Myers, and Phoenix.

TOLEDO RAILROAD

Toledo has a strong freight-focused rail network that plays a vital role in regional industry and logistics. The Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway (TPW), owned by Genesee & Wyoming, operates as a major shortline connecting local shippers to larger national rail networks. The Toledo Industrial Railroad (TIR) provides switching and transloading services that directly support area manufacturers and distribution facilities. Historically, the Toledo Terminal Railroad looped around the city, linking multiple major rail lines and enhancing freight connectivity. The Detroit and Toledo Shore Line Railroad (DTS), once a key corridor between Detroit and Toledo, is now part of Canada’s national rail system. On the passenger side, Amtrak serves Toledo at Martin Luther King Jr. Plaza, providing rail access to major cities, including Chicago via long-distance routes.
