Aztecs In The Community

At San Diego State University, community outreach is an important component of campus life. Over the years, Aztec athletes have been involved in numerous programs, including Habitat For Humanity, Special Olympics, Shop-With-A-Jock and MS Walk (Water Walkers).

Visits to Children's Hospital, local elementary schools and the Ronald McDonald House are common events for SDSU student-athletes. Over the last five years, red and black jerseys from all sports have become familiar sights at local military bases and hospitals.

San Diego State University has a partnership with Encanto Elementary School in which the Aztec athletic department provides student-athlete tutors and mentors for the school. Tickets to SDSU athletic events are rewards for outstanding academic achievement by the elementary students.

Food drives, stuffed-animal drives and Christmas gift drives are annual features at San Diego State University.

Last season, the SDSU's women's soccer team took part in Read Across America at Balboa Elementary School. The Aztecs divided up into classrooms and read to the Balboa students. The SDSU student-athletes also answered questions from the students about everything from soccer to the importance of learning.

The Aztecs also participated in a Feed the Homeless campaign, where each student-athlete spent the day making sandwiches and putting drinks, granola bars and chips into "to-go" containers. Following the food preparation, the team went to downtown San Diego and handed out food to the homeless.

"The students are providing a community service," said Bre White, who is the coordinator of SDSU's community service activities. "However, I would say that often times the student-athletes may gain the most from the experience."

"Community service is an important part of our program. We like for these young women to be able to give back to the San Diego community that supports them. In doing so, it takes the focus off the individual and it changes the way they view themselves, their teammates and the people around them."

- Head coach Mike Friesen
