Hi there. I'm camping at Oceano dunes SVRA right now through the holiday weekend.

This is my first time camping here and I live in Northern California.

I am torn between what is best to do about this beautiful state park. As a park ranger in my previous employment I love the fact native species such as the CA least tern and the western snowy Plover have a haven to breed and live. I hope their population thrives here. I entrust the state and federal government are ensuring that happens.

As a park goer and outdoor enthusiasts I need places like this to recreate. CA state and national parks are the reason I continue to work and live and to look forward to their recreational and educational opportunities.

After staying here one weekend I do feel a reduction in off road hours, and a reduction in number of campers is necessary.

I am unfamiliar with the dust pollution statistics but I did observe an incredibly large amount of vehicles and RV's just on the beach and although I had a reservation it was hard to find a place to camp. I loved seeing the state rangers enforcing their laws. I do plan on returning in the near future to enjoy this park.
