I respect and admire that. However, the whole book had a judgemental feeling to it. As if the use of paper towels and non organic food and drugstore lotion revokes your "green card". ;0) I really liked the intention of this book, but found many of the recipes out of reach and certainly not less expensive. Many of the beauty recipes require you to make them often and use many different essential oils so the up front cost is cost prohibitive. Yes, over the long run you will save money, but I can't afford to shell out $50 up front to make one recipe that I'm not sure will work. I did like some of the body creams and sprays because they used cheaper ingredients, like coconut oil that I can also use for food, but I already have similar recipes to those from free internet searches. The cleaning recipes are also pretty good, but again, aren't much different to what I have from free internet searches. She has a chapter each for pets, kids, sewing projects, home energy conservation and food. Again, most of the information included can be found on the internet. I will say that the author's directions were very clear and concise and made the projects seem very doable. Many of them included diagrams and drawings to illustrate the directions. I really liked that. I also really appreciated her chapter on fitness. Many people often leave that out when discussing this topic. What I think could have been very useful is a project plan. A schedule of sorts to revamp your life in a more eco way, including sample days and weeks, like fitness books do. Overall, I recommend this book for someone who wants to change one or many aspects of their life to be more environmental, but doesn't have the time to search the internet for recipes/info and would like to have all that information in one handy resource. With that said, I don't recommend this book if you have the time and/or desire to search the internet for these recipes, but don't have a lot of money in your budget allocated to
