To Whom It May Concern,

The Uncomfortable Dinner Party discussion addresses issues of sustainability in food on the University of Minnesota campus, our community, and the world. Participants learn how University of Minnesota Dining Services, operated by Aramark Higher Education, creates a comfortable atmosphere for discussions about food sustainability that often include competing interests.

Uncomfortable Dinner Parties provide a hands-on experience which prompts open and honest conversation about campus food sustainability. Dinner parties aim to talk about and teach the skills and tools necessary to engage in food sustainability conversations in today's world. The dinners and conversation have a wide appeal- not only to those directly involved in food service, but to students, faculty, and staff who seek collaboration on issues of food sustainability with other interested individuals and organizations.

Sincerely,

Alyssa Lundberg

ARAMARK Sustainability Coordinator
