I feel qualified to affirm the innovativeness and importance of this project because I have worked in career services for 19 years and I have been involved with implementing alumni surveys. I believe that GMC's effort to measure alumni impact on social, natural, and financial capital is unique. Few colleges ask their graduates questions about how big their home is or what transportation mode they choose for their daily commute. I think the project seems important for assessing higher education's impact on sustainability education by estimating how it affects graduates throughout their lives.

Sincerely,

Renée Beaupré White
Director of Career Services
