To Whom it May Concern:

Prescott College has a rich history of leadership in environmental studies and social justice. We serve a diverse community of learners and changemakers at our main campus in northern Arizona, as well as through our satellite centers and field stations in Tucson, Arizona, Kino Bay, Mexico, and Dopoi, Kenya. We also serve an extensive remote community through our online programs, some of which focus specifically on sustainability. Building on our history of experiential learning and self-direction, we provide an education that prepares students to think critically and act ethically while making powerful contributions within their communities and in their future careers.

In August 2019, the Prescott College community welcomed more than 150 students, faculty, and staff from Green Mountain College, a former national leader in sustainability education. One of the first actions undertaken by the new Green Mountain Center for Sustainability at Prescott College was to propose a position for a Sustainability Coordinator, which has since allowed us to move forward with self-assessment.

We are proud to present to you our first STARS submission in over a decade. As President of Prescott College, I affirm that the report has been completed with integrity and is an accurate reflection of our sustainability efforts. We are excited to use this STARS submission as a foundation for setting goals and building out our capacity to further our mission of fostering social and environmental sustainability, both within our campus communities and beyond.

Sincerely,
