Re: University of Louisville 2022 STARS submission

As a charter participant in the Sustainability, Tracking, Assessment & Rating System (STARS), the University of Louisville is proud to submit, for the fifth time, our current data for an updated rating. We remain excited about our collaborations with other AASHE member institutions to lead the sustainability transformation in higher education.

UofL continues to use the STARS framework as our primary tool for monitoring university-wide progress on sustainability for several reasons:

1. It is the only system of its kind that involves publicly reporting comprehensive information about a college or university's sustainability performance in all four areas that matter most: academics, operations, engagement, and planning & administration.
2. The criteria that determine a STARS rating are transparent and accessible to anyone, yet flexible enough to fit the special circumstances of any institution.
3. The STARS system of earned credits allows us to not only monitor our own progress over time and to plan strategically, but to compare our sustainability performance with similar institutions around the world.

Participation in STARS has helped keep UofL accountable for making continual progress on our commitment to sustainability. After a considerable amount of internal investigation, data-gathering, and analysis over the last year, the University of Louisville is delighted to submit our fifth STARS report in support of our increasingly strong rating.

In achieving this new STARS rating, we continue to exceed our strategic sustainability goals – a genuine reflection of the tremendous strides we've made in everything from energy efficiency and climate action planning, to student and community engagement in sustainability, to the incorporation of sustainability themes in curriculum development and research agendas.

It is also a testament to the dedication of our Sustainability Council and the many members of our faculty, staff, and student body from across our diverse university who are helping ensure that UofL continues to maintain outstanding academic performance and financial security while balancing environmental, social, and economic concerns.

I applaud the work of the many hands that helped assemble the University of Louisville's 2022 STARS report and look forward to advancing our rating even further in coming years.

Sincerely,
