City Attorney and Assistant City Manager Eric Monday opened the city's first Conversation Community about reversion by detailing various aspects of the reversion process, including the reasons the city chose to pursue reversion. He also took time to address various myths and misinformation about reversion during the more than 90-minute meeting.

became heated Wednesday.

Commissioner of Revenue Ruth Easley questioned city officials about what she said was a lack of information being conveyed to her and other constitutional officers about a path forward with consolidation of services.

Easley was the only speaker during the meeting, the first in a series of four, which the city is holding to allow residents to ask questions and discuss concerns about reversion.

Easley was one of only two members of the public to attend the meeting, which also was broadcast live on MGTV-

Council members Danny Turner, Tammy Pearson, Chad Martin, Vice Mayor Jennifer Bowles, Mayor Kathy Lawson, City Manager Leon Towarnicki, City Attorney and Assistant City Manager Eric Monday, Deputy Chief of Police Robert Fincher, and several members of the media also attended.

The first three cottage-style homes recently were put in place in the new Five Points neighborhood project, which broke ground on Nov. 18 last year.

A total of 27 units, a mix of 12 cottages and 15 townhouses, are slated for construction on both sides of West Church Street, near the intersection of Fayette Street and Memorial Boulevard South in Martinsville. The new homes are within walking distance of the Uptown area.

The project is a partnership between the City of Martinsville, Nationwide Homes, Silverpoint Homes, the Martinsville-Henry County Economic Development Corporation, United Way of Martinsville-Henry County, the USDA- Rural Development, Virginia Housing, and the Harvest Foundation.

The ranch-style cottage homes will be 995 square feet, with 2 bedrooms, 2 bathrooms, a porch, a separate dining area, a walk-in closet, and a hall closet. There are 2 styles of two-story townhouses slated for construction. The first is 1,106 square feet with 3 bedrooms and 1.5 bathrooms, a foyer, walk-in

"Hometown Hustle," a new web-reality series focusing on the entrepreneurial spirit of local small business owners, is set to premier Thanksgiving week-end courtesy of Natalie Hodge and Rudy's Girl

At 7 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 26, the first two 10-minute episodes will premiere on the Rudy's Girl Media YouTube channel.

Hodge said there are a total of six episodes in the pilot season, with two new episodes becoming available each week for three weeks. Each episode tells the story of a local business owner in Martinsville or Henry County.

Business owners highlighted in this pilot season are DeShanta Hairston of Books and Crannies, Herb Atwell of Mountain Valley Brewing, Jailyn Draper of Social Butterfly Media Management, Abraham Gonzalez of Ape's Frozen Yogurt, Teresa Martin of Teresa's School of Baton and Dance, and Wayne Draper of The TAD Space and Right Remediation, Restoration, & Repair.

Hodge said the lineup was specifically selected to showcase the diversity of both owners and businesses in the community and to highlight businesses that were at different stages in their development, from the very new to the wellestablished.

The series is hosted by Hodge. Devin Pendleton produced the show, along with attorney Michael McPheeters, who served as executive producer. It was shot and edited by K.J. Harkness and Jason Cahill of VLNZ. "Hometown Hustle" was created in partnership with the Martinsville County Chamber of Commerce's Partnership for Economic Growth (CPEG) and MHC Pay it Forward. The Harvest Foundation contributed funds for marketing. "Hometown Hustle" has its roots in Hodge's childhood.

A graduate of Laurel Park High School, Hodge said, "I grew up with a father who ran a convenience store that his parents founded in the late 1940s in Leatherwood."

A young Hodge served as the unofficial assistant manager, pumping gas, stocking shelves, doing anything and everything that needed to be done to contribute to the running of the family busi-"I learned about business from (my father.) I never had the desire to open a convenience store, but I knew that

After living and working in various places around the U.S. including New York, Detroit, and Los Angeles, Hodge eventually returned home and founded Rudy's Girl Media. The company, Hodge's first solely independent venture since her return, takes its name from the names of her parents and is a tribute to the entrepreneurial spirit her family instilled in her.

Amazon will establish a 630,000 square-foot facility on the Northern Virginia Gateway site to serve as one of the company's East Coast hubs. The new facility will be responsible for the beginning of a supply chain in which products from third-party vendors are sorted, repacked, and distributed to other Amazon distribution cen-

Virginia successfully competed with Maryland and North Carolina for the project. The facility is expected to be operational in the second half of 2022 and will add 500 new jobs to Amazon's existing workforce of more than 27,000 full- and parttime employees in the Commonwealth.

City schools' robotics teams rack up awards, advance to championship

Saturday November 6, robotics teams from Albert Harris and Patrick Henry elementary schools, and Martinsville School participated in the Martinsville Regional Qualifying Tournament, virtually, at the middle school.

The teams competed in a two-part tournament. The first part was judging their Robot Design, Innovation Project, and Core Values. The teams virtually presented to a panel of judges the week leading up to the robot game. The students had three two-and-a-half minute matches to complete as many missions as possible for the CARGO CONNECT lenge. This year the challenge was for the robot to deliver cargo to different forms of transportation or target locations

Easy answers

QUESTION 1: What caused World War II?

Argument: The Treaty of Versailles brought "The Great War" to a close, but at a massive cost to Germany. Germany had to pay enormous reparations to the Allies, which left the German economy in shambles and its government in chaos. Economic devastation often proves a fertile breeding ground for fascism, and a failed artist named Adolf Hitler followed the lead of Italian dictator Benito Mussolini and led a successful populist campaign to ascend to power in Germany. Once named dictator, Hitler allied with Mussolini and eventually a rapidly-growing Japan and began aggressively invading other countries. Some of these countries, such as Britain and France, were already weary from the Great War and decided to keep the peace through appeasement — essentially, meeting Hitler's demands. However, appeasement only caused the power-mad dictator to grow bolder while also offering him time to build his army. Some have even made the argument that World War I and World War II are not separate events but rather one long, continuous war, as the second could be argued to merely be an extension of the first. Ultimately, the main takeaway is that a populace forced to live in poverty and hardship is receptive to the honeyed words

Counter-argument: Germans

QUESTION 2: How does an automobile's internal combustion engine work?

Argument: Internal combustion engines are comprised of fixed cylinders and moving pistons. At the most basic level, a combination of air and fuel is drawn into a combustion chamber and ignited, which pushes the piston. The piston is connected to a crankshaft, and the continual movement of the piston(s) rotates the crankshaft. Through an elaborate series of gears in the vehicle's powertrain, the rotation of the crankshaft is translated to the vehicle's wheels.

By Ben R. Williams

Counter-argument: Magic.

QUESTION 3: Why don't we elect Presidents by popular

Argument: Rather than simply choosing the President who wins the most votes, we instead have a system called the Electoral College. Each state in the union has a set number of electoral votes equal to the number of people the state has in Congress, and all of those votes are given to the winner of the plurality of votes in that state. The founders were concerned about giving too much power to the people, so the Electoral College was created to serve as a sort of checkpoint. There are different opinions on whether the Electoral College should still be in place today, although no matter which side of the aisle you fall on, it's hard to argue that it's a bit strange when Presidents win the popular vote but not the election.

Counter-argument: Don't question the Founding Fathers.

QUESTION 4: Why are so many restaurants short-staffed?

Argument: After decades of wage stagnation, the COVID-19 pandemic changed the employment landscape. Members of the "Baby Boomer" generation retired, many taking early retirement, allowing members of subsequent generations to leave service industry jobs and fill in the gaps they left behind. Others began working from home during the pandemic or were forced from their service industry jobs due to pandemic-related closures, and over the subsequent months, they found different jobs at higher wages and felt no need to return to the service industry. Still others were forced out of the workforce due to a shortage of childcare options and have since found ways to make ends meet on a single parent's salary. And of course, 762,000 Americans have died of COVID at present and an untold number — likely more than a million — were rendered disabled due to long COVID; in either case, they cannot return to the workforce.

Counter-argument: No one wants to work anymore.

QUESTION 5: Why is gas so expensive?

Argument: During the pandemic, the demand for gasoline plummeted due to lockdowns. In April 2020, a barrel of crude oil briefly traded for below $0, prompting many oil wells to temporarily shut down, since there was no sense in spending thousands upon thousands of dollars to produce a product that you couldn't even give away. Now that effective vaccines are available and the COVID pandemic is beginning to subside, the demand for gasoline has increased dramatically, yet many wells are still offline. As crude oil production gradually increases and demand is met, the prices will reflect the increased supply.

Counter-argument: Let's go

The Trouble With the Infrastructure Bill

Morgan Griffith

9th District U.S. Rep.

Infrastructure is a topic with which most people are familiar. It's something that impacts them; they regularly travel on a road which could use fixing or see a need for a new road to make their travels easier.

The need for action is apparent, but the specifics of that action are less so. This fact will be important to remember as President Biden and congressional Democrats tout recently passed infrastructure legisla-

The $1.2 trillion bill is not all that it appears to be. In fact, it is both less and more than meets the eye.

How can that be? Let's take a look at the details of the bill, as well as the expressed statements of high-ranking Democrats.

It is less than meets the eye because much of the spending is not new, and most won't be spent anytime soon. Out of the existing spending, Virginia will receive the same as the last

In fact, less than half of the bill's spending - $625 billion - is new; the rest reauthorizes existing spend-

Of this new spending, only $110 billion goes toward roads, bridges, and similar projects generally considered to be infrastructure, divided among the 50 states. Virginia's share would be apportioned by Richmond. Accordingly, Virginia's Ninth Congressional District would be unlikely to enjoy a substantial share of that new funding.

Even if we broaden our look to other components of the bill, we find little that will benefit our part of the country.

Take broadband. Considering its centrality to modern society in areas from the economy to education to entertainment, broadband deserves a place in an infrastructure bill. Yet this particular infrastructure bill fails to sufficiently target its broadband efforts in communities that are truly unserved.

Outdated maps pose a challenge to ensuring that the communities that most need help with broadband receive it, but the bill does not require federal agencies administering the funds to use the most recent maps. Urban areas that enjoy sufficient service to do classwork online or watch Netflix will be allowed to draw from the funding as well as unserved rural areas.

As someone who has supported federal efforts to improve broadband in the Ninth District, I am skeptical that this bill will be as transformative as advertised in rural areas. This is true when you consider how many dollars are involved and the fact that many already-served urban areas will be able to access the funds as well.

The infrastructure bill spends more borrowed money but fails to reform policies that diminish the impact of that spending. The Trump Administration had put forward improved regulations that would speed approvals and cut down on red tape for public projects, but the Biden Administration has reversed those reforms, and the infrastructure bill does nothing to help in this regard. Without reforms, it will take years to get anything built or accompassage of the infrastructure bill helped pave the way for the larger, so-called "Build Back Better" reconciliation bill packed with Democrat priorities like the Green New Deal.

This $1.2 trillion in spending could unlock trillions more in a bill promoting an agenda that would diminish our economy and disrupt our way of life.

From the beginning, the Biden Administration has linked physical infrastructure with "social infrastructure," and congressional Democrats have followed its President Biden said in June of the infrastructure and reconciliation bill, "If only one comes to me, I'm not signing it. It's in tan-"There ain't gonna be no bipartisan [infrastructure]

bill unless we're going to have a reconciliation bill," agreed Speaker Pelosi. reconciliation to be nearly $4 trillion. Included in the bill are proposals that would make energy more expensive, raise taxes, including on the family farm, limit the possibility of innovative cures and treatments, and reduce incentives to work.

Not to mention, part of it is unconstitutional.

I am disappointed in the unfulfilled potential of the infrastructure bill. I could not support a bill that was touted as a landmark yet would have so little impact on the people I serve.

But even with that, passage of the reconciliation bill would be truly catastrophic for the country. Voting for $1.2 trillion meant advancing the $4 trillion big government reconciliation bill. I could not do that.

Myron Smith, of Martinsville, was recently initiated into The Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi, the nation's oldest and most selective all-discipline collegiate honor society. Smith was initiated at Virginia Commonwealth University.

Smith is among approximately 25,000 students, faculty, professional staff and alumni to be initiated into Phi Kappa Phi each Graduate students in the top 10 percent of the number of candidates for graduate degrees may also qualify, as do faculty, professional staff and alumni who have achieved scholarly distinction.

Phi Kappa Phi was founded in 1897 under the leadership of undergraduate student Marcus L. # Home cooking fires increase on holiday

As Thanksgiving fast approaches, the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) is urging everyone to use added caution when celebrating the holiday, as Thanksgiving Day represents the leading day for home cooking fires. More than three times as many cooking fires occur on Thanksgiving Day as a typical day of the year.

Thanksgiving is a hectic holiday that involves lots of cooking and distractions, which can make it easy to lose sight of what's on the stove and in the oven," said Lorraine Carli, NFPA's vice president of Outreach and Advocacy. "Unattended cooking is the leading cause of home cooking fires, so we strongly encourage people keep a close eye on what they're cooking and to minimize the likelihood of getting distracted."

According to NFPA data, cooking was the leading cause of reported home structure fires and civilian fire injuries and the second-leading cause of civilian fire deaths and direct property damage, on annual average from 2015 to 2019. On Thanksgiving Day alone, an estimated 1,400 home cooking fires were reported to U.S. fire departments in 2019, reflecting a 228 percent increase over the daily average.

"The good news is that the vast majority of cooking fires are preventable with a little added awareness," said Carli. "By taking simple steps and precautions to minimize the likelihood of having a cooking fire, everyone can enjoy a festive, fire-safe Thanksgiving."

Following are tips and recommendations from NFPA for cooking safely this Thanksgiving:

* Never leave the kitchen while cooking on the stovetop. Some types of cooking, especially those that involve frying or sautéing with oil, need continuous atten-

* When cooking a turkey, remain at home and check it

Make use of timers to keep track of cooking times, particularly for foods that require longer * Keep things that can catch fire like oven mitts, wooden utensils, food wrappers, and towels at least three feet away from the cooking area.

* Avoid long sleeves and hanging fabrics that can come in contact with a heat source.

* Always cook with a lid beside your pan. If you have a fire, slide the lid over the pan and turn off the burner. Do not remove the cover because the fire could start again. Let the pan cool for a long * Never throw water or use a fire extinguisher on the fire.

* For an oven fire, turn off the heat and keep the door closed.

Only open the door once you're confident the fire is completely out, standing to the side as you do. If you have any doubts or concerns, contact the fire department for assistance. * Keep children at least three feet away from the stove. Kids should also stay away from hot foods and liquids, as steam or splash from these items could cause severe burns.

In addition, NFPA strongly discourages the use of turkey fryers, as these can lead to severe burns, injuries, and property damage. For a safe alternative, NFPA recommends grocery stores, food retailers, and restaurants that sell deep-fried turkey.

er, said there often is confusion between Veteran's Day and Memorial Day. "If you have someone who is a veteran today, at some point we will be memorializing them as well. We never want to forget them for what they did for us, their country, their family, and their God." However, he added, Memorial

Day is for remembering those who are lost, while on Veteran's Day those honored "are still with us, and they can be here for us to be able to thank them for their deeds. Memorial Day, we're still talking to them in our heart." The U.S. Army National Guard 29th Infantry Band performed service songs from each branch of military service—Coast Guard, Air Force, Navy, Marine Corps, and Army. Veterans of each branch stood and saluted as their song was played.

This year's guest speaker, Dr. G.H. Vaughan, Jr., of McCabe Memorial Baptist Church in Martinsville, said, "I just simply say, 'thank you.'"

Adding that his father was a military police officer in Germany during the Korean War, he said you are the folks who should be talking today. Your sacrifice and your service has provided for us all of the gifts that we participate in and that we share."

Referencing a story in 1

Chronicles, Vaughan said that Israel was amid a civil conflict and David was assembling a group of veterans, among them the sons of Issachar, to unify the kingdom and bring an end to the conflict. The attributes of the sons of Issachar embodied the same values as those evident in veterans today: Integrity, honesty, and respect.

We need for you to lead on," Vaughan said. "You have led us. We need for you to continue to lead on, in your homes and in your organizations and in your communities and in your churches. Be proactive. Lead on."

David Kipfinger, an Army veteran and the Post Commander of local Veteran Service Organization (VSO), read out the names of award recipients since inception of the award in 1992. He then presented this year's award to Kipfinger said Sheppard graduated from Martinsville High School in 1965 and entered the Marine Corps in March 1966, where he served two years of active duty and four years in the reserves.

During his basic training at Parris Island, he excelled on the rifle range, outshooting the instructor by four points and earning an award for outstanding marksman in his platoon. He went to Camp Geiger for advanced infantry training then on to mechanic school in North Carolina, where he finished at the top of his class and was promoted to Private First Class. In Cherry Point, N.C., he was assigned to the 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing as a mechanic, and later specialized in hydraulics.

After his release from active duty as a Lance Corporal in March 1968, Kipfinger said Sheppard "returned home with a strong desire to serve his country, his community, and his church." He served as a Marine Corps reservist for another four years and was honorably discharged March 22, 1972. He joined the Collinsville Jaycees and helped raise $250,000 to build tennis courts and develop the Collinsville Jaycee Park, He also has been active with the Toys for Tots program since 1995.

Sheppard helped organize the Marine Corps League of Martinsville and Henry County, which received its charter in 1995, and currently serves as the league's commandant. In 1997, he received the Distinguished Service Award from the Marine Corps League State Department for meritorious service and was named Marine of the Year in 2011. He currently serves as chaplain for the Honor Guard of Martinsville and Henry County.

Sheppard created a Veteran's Museum, The Victory Room, in the basement of the Bible Baptist Church, of which he is a member. He previously received Martinsville and Henry County's Outstanding Military Veteran Sheppard said being chosen by his peers for the award was a distinct honor.

"All of the accomplishments I've made would have been totally impossible, I couldn't have done any of it, without a supporting wife. This is for you," he said.

Henry County Board of Supervisors Vice Chairman Debra Buchanan and Reed Creek District supervisor Tommy Slaughter, as well as Martinsville Mayor Kathy Lawson presented the Outstanding Military Veteran award to Millner.

Buchanan said the award, which was created by the supervisors in 2009 and expanded to include Martinsville in 2013, "goes to the nominee judged by the selection committee who best represents what service to our country and the community

She said that Millner began his military career as an enlisted soldier in the Army where he held numerous positions, including Mechanic Helper and Battalion Maintenance Officer.

"Through his tireless dedication, he climbed through the ranks and retired as Chief Warrant Officer 3. Notably, during his time serving in Vietnam, he served as the Non-Commissioned Officer in charge of Operation Keystone, responsible for the scheduling and preparation of ordinance and engineer equipment turn-in at Cam Ranh Bay," she said.

Millner's military decorations and awards include the Army Service Ribbon, the Overseas Service Ribbon, the Vietnam Campaign Medal, the Vietnam Service Medal, the National Defense Service Medal, the Mechanics Badge and Bar, the Meritorious Unit Commendation, four Good Conduct Medals, the Vietnam Cross of Gallantry with Palm, the Army Commendation Medal, the Humanitarian Service Medal, the NCO Professional Development Ribbon, and the Legion of Merit.

Buchanan said Millner previously served as senior Army instructor for Henry County Public Schools' JROTC, and "passed down the values of citizenship, duty, and responsibility to the next generation."

Millner was previously selected as Veteran of the Year in 2009.

"This is truly a surprise," Millner said. He thanked Jesus "for allowing me to do this," and his wife for sharing him with his community, state, and nation. "I thank each and every one of you and I encourage those that have not, to get involved. God is not through with us yet," he said.

reasons the city chose to pursue reversion, various issues involved, a history of reversion in Virginia, services that would still be provided by the town of Martinsville, and the number of issues raised by residents.

Monday emphasized that, in terms of urban "nothing will services, change." The future town will be required to provide services "at least at the same level that you get it now."

Taxes will not double for town residents, he said. "There will be two bills when this process is concluded. That doesn't mean that your taxes are doubled, it just means you get two bills," Monday said, adding that one of the reasons the city pursued reversion was because it did not want to further increase the tax burden on its residents.

County residents, however, will see an overall tax increase he said.

Monday emphasized that the future town would not push any of its debt onto the county. Martinsville will retain its debt upon reversion.

However, he pointed out that there has been "a significant amount of debt incurred by Henry County" in the last few years with the construction of Meadow View Elementary and the new jail. The debt, he said, is significantly more than the city's current debt.

"Does any of that contribute to Henry County's proposed tax increase for the coming year? Or, to be frank, is blaming it on you more convenient," Monday asked. "Keep in mind, that the Henry County Administrator's own total cost for reversion is $5 million. So, still many unknowns in the reversion process. The county still must vote on whether to adopt the agreement. The threejudge panel has not yet been convened, and there is not yet an effective date for reversion. She suggested Easley's concerns about office consolidation were "putting the cart before the horse."

Bowles suggested that Easley meet informally with her counterpart in Henry County to help ease what she acknowledged would be a "difficult, difficult process." Easley said that, while she could speak to the county's Commissioner of Revenue, "we can't make the decisions. You all are the ones who hold the purse strings." Easley said that, without more complete information, she was not able to offer an accurate estimate of the time needed to transition. She added that the city should have had discussions with her and other constitutional officers much earlier in the process, "because it does impact the timeline that you were trying to set with the reversion date." Initially, the city requested to revert on July 1, 2022, which Easley referred to as

"crazy." Lawson ended further discussion. "It is a negotiation," she told Easley.

Noting that the meeting was 30 minutes longer than its advertised 60 minutes, Lawson said Easley brought up some good points and that details would be discussed with all constitutional officers. The next community conversation will focus on schools. It is scheduled to be held on Tuesday, Dec. 7 at 6 p.m. in council chambers.

Revenue collections increased 15.6 percent last month

General fund revenues grew 15.6 percent in October, driven by an impressive growth in payroll withholding and sales tax collections, according to Gov. Ralph Northam.

"We are excited to see increased revenue collections once again," said Northam. "This continued growth is a reflection of the Commonwealth's responsible fiscal management—our smart investments continue to pay off for Virginians."

Collections of payroll withholding taxes grew 9.8 percent in October. Collections of sales and use taxes, reflecting September sales, rose 12.2 percent in October. Collections of wills, suits, deeds, and contracts were $55.8 million in October, compared with $59.9 million in October of last year, a 6.8 percent decrease and the first decrease in 14 months.

"Despite strong headwinds during the first quarter of fiscal year 2022 due to the Delta variant, supply chain issues and inflationary pressures, October's positive revenue growth continues to demonstrate Virginia's economy is on a solid path toward recovery," said Secretary of Finance Joe Flores. On a fiscal year-to-date basis, total revenue collections grew 11.8 percent, ahead of the annual forecast of an 8.0 percent decrease. Collections of payroll withholding taxes—62 percent of General Fund revenues—increased 9.7 percent, ahead of the annual forecast of 1.7 percent growth. Sales tax collections—17 percent of General Fund revenues increased 15.4 percent through October, ahead of the annual forecast calling for a 4.2 percent

The Joint Advisory Board of Economists met on October 13 to assess recent economic developments and the economic outlook for the current and next biennium. The Governor's Advisory Council on Revenue Estimates will meet on November 22 to evaluate both the Joint Advisory Board of Economists' economic recommendations and revenue collections through October. The Governor's Advisory Council on Revenue Estimates members' recommendations will be incorporated into the general fund revenue forecast to be released on December 16 when the Governor meets with the General Assembly money committees.

closet, pantry, and hall closet. The second is 1,216 square feet with 3 bedrooms, 1.5 bathrooms, a separate dining area, pantry, hall closet, and extended front porch.

Martinsville-Henry County Housing and Revitalization coordinator Jeff Sadler said the city originally hoped to sell the cottages for $125-130,000 but, due to the rising cost of supplies, these first houses are priced at $139,750.

"They were invoiced higher," he said, "but we were able to move some funds around from various grants to get that under $140,000. We won't know for sure what the cost of the next set is because it all depends on the cost of materials, which are, to some extent, coming back down. We're hoping that we can at least be in that same ($140,000) range."

Additionally, Sadler said "we hoped to have the townhomes available at around $145,000, but they will likely be in the $150-160,000 depending on materials costs and any other cost savings we can find." However, it is still too early to provide an accurate number.

Five homes are being placed in this first round of construction. The homes were pre-built offsite, and the first ones were put in place last week. Final details, including siding, gutters, utility hookups, and interior work, are being completed on-site.

The project began with a housing study which, Sadler said, showed a strong demand for newer housing, particularly at lower price points. The study indicated "half of the houses in the Martinsville and Henry County area are at least 50-years-old, and almost two-thirds of them are at least 40-years-old, so the housing stock has become outdated.

"A lot of these houses," he added, "were built with a 40- or 50-year lifespan. They were workforce housing, not expected to last 100 years."

This project, he said, puts new housing stock in place that is specifically targeted to the area's workforce.

"One of the things we're hearing from employers is they're having trouble attracting and keeping employees, and one of the reasons is there isn't much appropriate housing, so people end up finding a place to live in Greensboro or Danville or Roanoke. Eventually, they get tired of the drive and find a job there, so we're trying to replenish the housing stock so there are good options for people here," Sadler said.

City Manager Leon Towarnicki said the houses are geared toward someone making around $20 an hour. He estimated that taxes and utilities for the entire neighborhood, once completed, will result in annual revenues of $120,000 for the

Sadler said that there are some income restrictions imposed on potential homebuyers in the new neighborhood to ensure the homes are available for lower income homebuyers to purchase.

Partnerships between the city and entities that include the USDA-Rural Development and United Way, are intended to help make the homes affordable and to help buyers find a payment plan that works for them.

"If you were to buy these houses, purchase the land and get them all set, these would be $175,000 each. But because the city's donating the land, some administrative costs, Harvest is donating administrative costs and serving as fiscal agent for the project," costs are relatively low, he said.

USDA-Rural The Development has "some mortgage programs that allow for a 33- or 38-year amortization, so instead of being a 30-year mortgage, stretching it out a couple more years make it a little more affordable on a monthly basis," Sadler said, adding that the programs also include low down payments and reduced interest rates. When combined with

Virginia Housing programs which, Sadler said, qualify borrowers for USDÁ loans, "you could get into one of these houses for basically a payment on a nice car."

He added that Virginia Housing gave a $500,000 grant to the project, a good portion of which went toward prepping the area for the placement of the houses.

Sadler said the United Way has a savings match program for people with lower incomes called Virginia Individual Development Accounts

"They do some financial literacy classes, but it's an 8 to 1 match," so if someone enrolled in the program saves $500 over six months, "they can get matched with $4,000, which comes out to about 3 percent of the price of one of these homes," Sadler said, and noted that most firsttime homebuyers have a 3 percent down payment requirement, "so you can save your down payment pretty easily if you follow the rules of the program."

Towarnicki told city officials that there has been a "considerable amount of interest" from potential homebuyers since construction began.

Selling the homes is a key part of moving the construction process for-

"The more homes we get purchased, the more we can build," Sadler

The plan is to build in phases, constructing roughly five houses at a time. Once most of the first set are sold, that money will be funneled into construction of the next set and so on until, eventually, a new neighborhood of affordable, modern housing is complete.

Hodge said that some people got laid off from their jobs and turned their hobby into a business. Others, like Hodge, grew up around a family business, realized that being an owner themselves was a natural next step. Some, she said, are serial entrepreneurs who have owned multiple businesses and finally found something that was "it."

"I love those stories," she said.

None of the success stories Hodge saw showcased in film and television focused on people from a little town in Southwest Virginia.

"I felt like that story specifically needed to be told, and I felt like this was the place to do it," she said, and added that she came home to a community ready to come together and help make independent projects come to life.

While working on "Sell," a short film that was one of her company's earliest projects, she said she was stunned by the support she received.

"It took off," she said, "The ways that people chipped in for this project" that premiered on Thanksgiving weekend in 2019, were different from what she experienced working in places like New York.

"We had sold out shows for the whole Hodge weekend," recalled. "It felt so good to be in a space where people were extremely grateful to have this little production happen

She found even more support during the filming of her next project, "Stolen Crowns," which was created during the pandemic.

Not only were people willing to lend their time, their spaces, or even their cars, but Hodge recruited talented people from the area to contribute to the films.

"There are people here who don't know how good they are," she said. 'I've worked with people here on the technical side who are better than some of the people I've worked with in the larger markets. It's just the people here don't know that what they've learned through YouTube videos and doing it on their own is competitive" in the industry. Hodge said she want-
