NRCC ACCE program gets $50,000 boost

The Access to Community College Education program provides free college education to area students.

New River Community College Educational Foundation was recently awarded a $50,000 grant from the American Electric Power Foundation to support students in the New River Valley.

The funds will support NRCC Educational Foundation's Access to Community College Education (ACCE) Program and will serve students from Floyd, Giles, Montgomery, and Pulaski counties and the City of Radford.

"ACCE has become a cornerstone of support for higher education and economic growth in our region," said Angie Covey, Executive Director of the NRCC Educational Foundation. "We are so grateful for the continued generous support of businesses like AEP who find great value in helping our local students get the education and training they need, without the debt they don't."

ACCE is an economic development public/private partnership that makes college available debt-free to high school and home-schooled graduates by funding NRCC tuition for two years, making college within reach for students in the New River Valley. With the support of ACCE, students graduate from NRCC prepared to join the workforce or transfer to a four-year university without college debt. ACCE supports as many students as possible based on student need and funds available for the program. While participating in ACCE, students complete at least 80 hours of volunteer service annually in the New River Valley.

The American Electric Power Foundation supports quality of life for people in the communities where AEP and its operating units serve and where AEP employees live and work.

Governor announces new steps to accelerate COVID-19 vaccination efforts

RICHMOND— Virginia Governor Ralph Northam Wednesday announced new actions to support the Commonwealth's COVID-19 vaccine distribution program and accelerate the pace of vaccinations across Virginia.

Governor Northam has taken the following five steps to help providers increase the rate of vaccinations as quickly, safely, and equitably as possible:

- Vaccination goal. The governor set an initial goal of vaccinating 25,000 Virginians each day when supply allows.

- 'Use it or lose it' model. Medical facilities will be required to put the vaccine they receive into arms as soon as possible or risk having future vaccine allotments reduced.

- Dr. Danny T.K. Avula will lead vaccination efforts in Virginia. The governor appointed Dr. Avula, who serves as director of the Richmond City and Henrico County Health Departments, to coordinate work among state officials, local health departments, hospitals and private providers.

- Expanded priority groups. The governor announced that K-12 teachers and child care workers will be among the next priority groups to receive vaccinations after Group A and outlined the populations that will be included in Groups B and C.

- Elevating the Virginia National Guard. As the commonwealth receives more doses, the Virginia National Guard will provide logistical support and help local health departments with administering the vaccines.

"Getting Virginians vaccinated against COVID-19 is the best way to end this pandemic, rebuild our economy and move our Commonwealth forward," Northam said. "By setting clear goals and appointing Dr. Avula to spearhead our vaccination program, we will have a clear vision of how this effort—the largest public vaccination campaign in modern history—is progressing. I plan to get vaccinated when my turn comes, and I encourage Virginians to do the same."

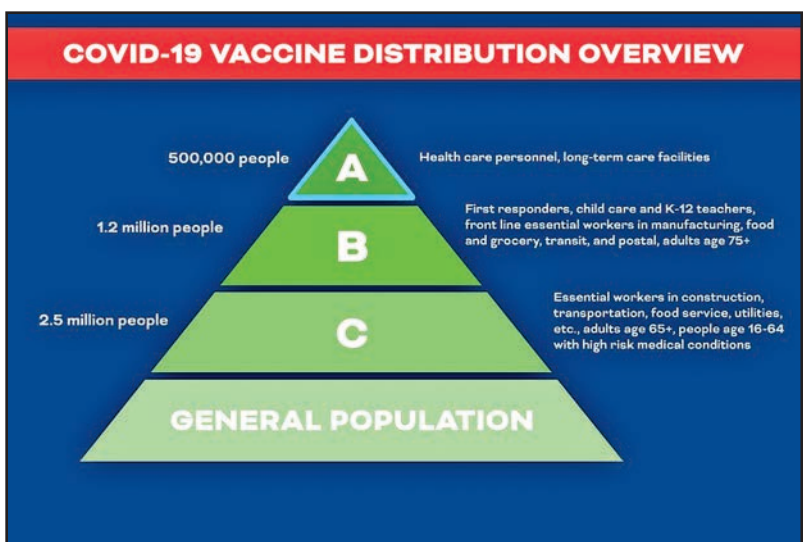

The vaccination overview the governor released Wednesday established priorities for three groups ahead of the general population.

Group A (500,000 people) includes healthcare personnel and persons living in long-term care facilities.

Group B (1.2 million people) includes frontline essential workers in specific industries, K-12 teachers and staff, childcare providers, adults age 75 and older and people living in correctional facilities, homeless shelters and migrant labor camps.

Group C (2.5 million people) includes other essential workers, adults age 65 and older and people age 16-64 with certain medical conditions or disabilities that increase their risk of severe illness from COVID-19.

The Virginia Department of Health is developing an online portal to help people understand how to register to receive a COVID-19 vaccination.

Deadline nears for 2021 Community Foundation online scholarship applications

CHRISTIANSBURG -- The deadline for applying for the Community Foundation of the New River Valley's (CFNRV) 40-plus scholarship opportunities is 5 p.m. on Feb. 1.

High school students, college students and adults returning to college in the New River Valley (NRV) can review those opportunities and apply at <https://cfnrv.org/scholarships/applicants-information/>. Recipients will be announced in April.

Established in 2002, the foundation's scholarship program aims to support the educational aspirations of students so they can achieve their full potential, to nurture a skilled workforce in the region and to cultivate future community leaders.

The program has grown steadily over the past 18 years, awarding more than $729,000 to 690 students from more than 40 endowed scholarship funds. Individuals, families and NRV businesses establish the funds, which the foundation invests for long-term growth. The foundation also manages the application process. Each scholarship fund has its own unique criteria, meeting the unique interests of the donor and ensuring that there is an opportunity for students of all kinds to earn a scholarship.

The COVID-19 pandemic prevented donors, recipients and their families from gathering at the annual scholarship awards dinner, but many recipients and donors alike expressed their gratitude for scholarships in such an uncertain time. Tracey Linkous established the Living4Bri Scholarship in 2019 following the loss of her daughter, Brianna.

"We are so pleased to be growing our Living4Bri Scholarship Memorial with the Community Foundation," Linkous said. "With the help of the foundation, we are able to offer opportunities to Christiansburg High School graduates pursuing a future in nursing. We have created a legacy for our daughter and are able to participate in the future education of those in our community."

The fund awarded its first scholarship to Jessica Kniskern. "I am deeply honored to be chosen for the Living4Bri Scholarship Fund," Kniskern said. "I plan to pursue a Bachelor of Science in Nursing degree from Radford University. It is my sincere hope that becoming a registered nurse will honor Bri's memory as we shared an interest in nursing."

In 2020, the Foundation celebrated the largest year of the program to date, awarding more than $108,000 in scholarships to 81 students from across the New River Valley. The 2020 group of scholarship winners was one of the most diverse to date with 26% of the winners being first-generation college students. Recipients will attend a wide range of colleges with 85.2% staying in the state of Virginia and 12.34% attending out-of-state college. More than 50% of the students will be staying in the New River Valley with 38.3% attending Virginia Tech, 18.52% attending Radford University and 8.6% going to New River Community College.

Laura Pynn, administration and programs manager at the foundation, said, "Overseeing this program is my favorite part of my role at the foundation. I'm proud of the diversity that our scholarships offer to students in our region. We have a scholarship fund available to anyone who has a dream of achieving a degree in higher education. "With the coronavirus, we realize that many of our 2021 students will have unique senior years as the class of 2020 did. I am proud that we are offering these scholarships during the pandemic to deserving students who have worked hard to get to this point. I encourage all eligible NRV students to apply now and hope to have the opportunity to meet the recipients this year."

their cultural initiatives and events. She is dedicated to providing access to the arts for all and to ensuring that artists have the tools they need to succeed, sharing their stories and connecting them with their audiences."

Lattuca says she is honored and humbled by the promotion.

"For the past 25 years this organization has served as a true beacon for the arts in our region because of the hard work, creativity and leadership of a long line of arts enthusiasts and forward-thinking individuals," she said. "Now, today, I find myself honored, humbled and so very grateful to take my place in that line by being entrusted to lead the Center into its next 25 years. I am so thankful to be able to do this work under the dedicated leadership and guidance of Linda Fallon and the entire Board of Directors and alongside the devoted staff and volunteers who all do so much to continuously improve access to the arts for all. I find inspiration every single day in the work we do together."

Lattuca also praised retired executive director Jeff Liverman for his leadership.

"I would be remiss if while expressing my gratitude, I didn't also tip my hat to my predecessor, Jeff Liverman, who retired from serving as Executive Director last month, paving the way for me to move into this role," she said. "Jeff's leadership over the past eight years has led the Center to where it is today – poised to move forward with confidence and strength to further elevate the arts in our region. I am thrilled to now do exactly that, to move forward with confidence and strength to further elevate the arts in our region."

The Floyd Center for the Arts seeks to showcase, support, and facilitate artistic endeavors and rural creativity throughout Southwest Virginia. Located in a historic dairy barn in Floyd, Virginia, the center pursues its mission through year-round educational opportunities, housing resident studio artists, mounting rotating exhibits that feature local and regional artists and artisans and more. www.FloydArtCenter.org

History professor's 'Connecting the Interstates' grant to explore effects of interstate highway system

On the road to connecting the United States, government officials displaced hundreds of thousands of Americans.

The interstate highway system launched in the 1950s as the most ambitious public works project in the world. Spanning 48,000 miles, the system aimed to connect cities and towns throughout the nation.

While the massive project succeeded in revamping transportation and commerce, its cost cut far deeper than the $125 billion price tag.

Building the interstate highways meant steamrolling through neighborhoods, bulldozing homes, and shredding the fabric of communities. Estimates of displacement range from 330,000 housing units to 1 million residents, mostly in poor and minority neighborhoods.

Currently, no mapping systems exist to pinpoint every community affected by the displacement and environmental destruction.

LaDale Winling, an associate professor of history at Virginia Tech, is determined to change that. And to help him achieve that goal, the National Endowment for Humanities has provided him with a prestigious grant to kickstart a new project, "Connecting the Interstates."

"The goal is to develop a digital platform that helps us consider the consequences of building the interstate highway system," said Winling.

"Connecting the Inter-states" will illuminate the damaging effects of the highway system through an interactive map, Winling said. The tool can help community leaders, public officials, journalists, and historians along with the general public understand the system's impact on a deeper level.

"The story of the interstate highway system is often told triumphantly," said Winling. "It was an unprecedented stroke of genius politically and a civil engineering feat. But the negative impacts of the system are still felt in communities today. 'Connecting the Interstates' will allow communities to consider the historical costs of displacement and use this knowledge in future decision-making."

Securing the interstate highway data will require extensive research and widespread collaboration among urban historians. Most of the blueprints, maps and other historical documents for the interstate highway system are scattered in state archives across the nation.

A Virginia Tech alumna, Carmen Bolt, will serve in a crucial research role in the project by collecting and organizing documents from all participants. Bolt will also conduct research trips to a National Archives facility.

"I'm thrilled to serve a role in this massive collaboration with scholars across the country," said Bolt, who earned her master's and bachelor's degrees in history and a minor in political science. The "Connecting the Interstates" team will use the planning period to determine the location of necessary documents and how to secure them. Researchers will need to digitize some of the analog artifacts.

Winling said he's grateful for the National Endowment for Humanities grant as it lays the foundation for the entire project. "If you want to take on the whole interstate system, you need national support," he said.

Winling envisions "Connecting the Interstates" as ultimately an easily accessible tool for communities across the nation.

County schools remain week-to-week on fate of athletics

Several hundred Montgomery County student-athletes and their families gathered outside Tuesday's regularly-scheduled school board meeting to protest the lack of play for winter sports in the school system.

In what continues to be a controversial stance, Montgomery County schools will not allow winter athletics (basketball, wrestling, swimming and cheer) to begin for another week.

At the root of the matter is the high number of positive COVID-19 cases in the county. Montgomery County Public Schools (MCPS) are following "Return to Play Criteria" approved late last year. In addition, they are using the Virginia High School Phase III Guidelines as they continue to see high numbers of positive COVID cases that have not been trending down for the past two weeks.

"We continue to look at those numbers and monitor them as we move forward," said Danny Knott, MCPS' Human Resource Director.

His remarks came during a school board meeting Tuesday night, and those numbers show that Montgomery County remains in the high-risk category. Once the metrics trend downward for a 14-day period, then high school athletic competition can begin.

Virginia health officials reported Wednesday morning a total of 377,300 coronavirus cases and 5,226 virus-related deaths since the pandemic began, including 5,387 new confirmed and probable diagnoses, marking the highest single-day spike in new cases since the start of the pandemic, and 35 new confirmed and probable fatalities across the commonwealth.

Montgomery County has been averaging 30-40 new cases daily. The county has recorded 5,398 cases, 115 hospitalizations and 43 since the pandemic began.

The New River Valley Public Health Task Force provided a COVID-19 update Wednesday. Health Department Director Dr. Noelle Bissell, said patience is a key word for everyone to remember. It's going to be a while before the area turns the corner with COVID, she said.

"Even with the vaccinations, we know the current preventive measures are still important," Bissell said. She also discussed how athletics are being affected. "We are following the Virginia High School guidelines, and I am very happy area superintendents have gotten together and come up with a unified plan."

The "MCPS Return to Play Criteria" was approved by Region VI superintendents from Allegheny, Covington, Craig, Botetourt, Roanoke County, Roanoke City, Salem, Montgomery, Floyd, Franklin, Patrick, Henry, Martinsville, Pittsylvania and Danville.

The discussion at the school board meeting did not come without controversy as several hundred student-athletes and their families gathered outside the meeting room. Participants held signs that read "Let us play" as board members and staff were greeted with similar chants.

The "Let Them Play" effort has gained momentum as a Facebook page has advocated for measures to change.

Currently, Montgomery County athletes are allowed to practice, but none have seen competition this school year. The timetable comes at a critical point for winter sports as fall sports are scheduled to begin practice in early February.

Knott pointed out that using the Virginia Department of Health Pandemic Metrics Dashboard, schools must be in the moderate category and be trending down or lower level for athletics competition to be held. The only exception under the plan is that the local health department could say there are extenuating circumstances in that locality that minimizes the impact on the activity.

"Right now, those numbers are not at a level where we can play," Knott said.

Under the plan, he said, the school system looks at the numbers weekly and determines whether or not athletic competition can begin. Knott said the school system is asking athletic directors at each school to adjust on the fly. So far, as many as two dozen contests have been cancelled or postponed.

During a public address time at Tuesday's school board meeting, parents and some student-athletes pleaded with leaders to reconsider the policy.

Kate Henley, whose son plays basketball and football at Christiansburg High School, said the student-athletes have suffered from not playing. "It's great that they can go to practice and they can go to weightlifting, but if they can't compete, then what's the purpose?"

She also said that athletics have a positive effect on her child and others by keeping their grades up and possibly providing an avenue to college because of their "outstanding play."

"Every time they turn around it's another setback, it's another pushback," Henley said. "These kids are getting devastated because a lot of them are seniors, not only in Christiansburg, but also the other schools in the county, and they really want to play."

One teacher did step up to the speaker's lectern and asked the board to consider "remote learning" for the children in Montgomery County. Currently, grades K-6 are attending school under one format or another. He expressed concern the county is putting staff at risk as much as the students themselves.

Knott told the board that over 60 teachers and staff were out Tuesday because of COVID protocols. The exact number of positive cases within the staff is not known, but he admitted the virus is taking its toll.

The continued struggle with COVID-19 is being felt across the commonwealth. Other states, including Tennessee, have begun play, and some counties in deep southwest Virginia have also started sports competition.

A similar request to "Let Them Play" was heard Monday night during a Roanoke County meeting. School board members there agreed to proceed with a "varsity-only" schedule.

If and when high school sports competition does begin in Montgomery County, basketball players will be required to wear masks during competition, making Montgomery one of only two localities to require them.

The MCPS superintendent told the board Tuesday that all schools that remain on county sports schedules have agreed to wear masks when they play here or away because of the requirement.

Under the current plan, the school system is requiring all competition participants to be screened including temperature checks before entering the school facility. Also, county schools will not allow spectators to attend athletic or academic competition.

Between indoor jayvee and varsity competitions and middle school games, the gyms will be cleared and sanitized.

One proposal that was brought up during Tuesday's meeting was that if the delay continues, then Montgomery County schools could go to a "county only" schedule for the rest of the winter sports season.

"We hope very soon that our metrics will get us to a point where we can play," Knott concluded.

"But for now, we cannot."

The earliest Montgomery County athletes could see the court, mat or pool is January 18.

School sports calendars are already littered with cancellations and postponements.

Evans King: On appliances (sort of)

I did something a couple of weeks ago that was typical of my efforts at home repair and “fixing things.”

This column is a tad embarrassing to write because my grandfather Charlie King made his living with his hands. In addition to helping raise eight kids on a small farm, he was at various times a mechanic, a coal miner and a handyman. And my Dad was skilled enough that he was his own general contractor for the home that he and my mother lived in for almost 50 years, and he made things like dog houses and put up fences and basketball goals. I apparently got none of those genes.

I do have on my resume that I worked several summers for Poff Construction during my college years. And it is true.

But unlike my great friend Greg, who worked with me in those long ago summers, I was the essence of “unskilled labor” on job sites. I mainly toted things such as bricks, blocks, lumber, carpeting and appliances. I was strong enough and energetic enough and paid attention enough (usually) that I was pretty good at getting things from one place to another, but I wasn’t much good at doing anything with them after I got them there.

Which brings me to my most recent failure. I was doing laundry, moving the clothes from the washer to the dryer when I noticed that one of those softener sheets that folks toss in dryers had been sucked into the lint screen. I couldn’t quite get my fingers on it and having been warned that they can foul up the venting process, I decided to use a pair of scissors to reach into the opening and grab the darn thing and pull it out. Here is where my skill at taking a mildly irritating situation and turning it into a total disaster came into play. The scissors slipped from my hand and ended up somewhere in the bowels of the Samsung.

Not satisfied with this on-base error, I decided to “boot the ball again,” so I turned on the machine to see if the scissors were in any place that mattered. Apparently they were. The noise that came from the machine at that point can only be referred to as horrific. Metal on metal. The offshoot was 10 days or so without a dryer, an unthinkable hardship.

As I thought about it, this situation did at least present a great opportunity to write about appliances. Every self-respecting humorist (or wannabe) around my age has to write about appliances at some point.

One of my writer heroes, Bill Bryson, in his wonderful book The Life and Times of the Thunderbolt Kid (strongly recommend), wrote about the 1950’s and early 1960’s that never again in America would people take pride in acquiring and owning household appliances. If you rule out computer-age technology as “appliances,” he was certainly correct.

And that pride of ownership of things that performed simple tasks and eliminated manual labor sure struck a chord with my memories of being raised on Cherry Lane.

I thought back and realized that not until I was well out of the house and finished with college did my parents even own a clothes dryer. Like most or all of the neighbors, we had a clothes line in the backyard (hazards during night time games of kick the can). We also had a clothes line in the basement for those several months of the year that items would freeze on the outside line even harder than air drying normally made them (pre-Downy and pre-Bounce days). I still remember that our bath towels typically had the delicate texture of cardboard.

So I decided I shouldn’t agonize over a week or two with no dryer. My parents raised me without ever having one. I then started tracking and remembered that we didn’t have a dishwasher (except for my father) or a garbage disposal (unthinkable in my life now) either or even a shower. These items existed in some fashion in the America of my youth I guess, but they were considered “luxuries,” and my depression-era father did not believe in “luxuries.”

We also did not have a television set until I was 7 years old, going to my grandmother’s house across town for “special events,” partially because televisions were “luxuries” and partially because we did not get good reception of the two stations out of Roanoke or the one from Bluefield in our one-story house where a rooftop antenna was not very effective.

We also did not have a “frost-free” refrigerator, the invention of which no doubt was a cause of celebration for the housewives of America in the early ‘60’s and a sure sign that we would beat the Russians to the moon. I still remember my folks unplugging our little refrigerator and putting newspaper all over the linoleum floor in the kitchen to soak up the water that eventually would seep out as the ice build-up in the freezer compartment melted. This task was an overnight process and was repeated several times a year. I remember my Dad taking great pride when sometimes he could break some big chunks of frost out of the freezer and toss them in the sink, delaying the defrosting process for a few weeks. Preventive maintenance.

This all leads me to one more great recollection of my parents and the apparatuses around our house. We didn’t have a clothes washer, it was a “washing machine”; we didn’t have a lawn mower, we had a “mowing machine.” I am sure that if my father had lived to the day of ubiquitous desktops and laptops and iPads, they would not have been computers. They would have been “email machines.”

Home Country by Slim Randles

A new year. A new start. Who said I can’t finish this book?

Dud Campbell walked the frozen sidewalk and blew steamy breath out through his parka hood.

All I need, really, are a few ideas.

Dud’s been working on his novel, “Murder in the Soggy Bottoms,” for several years now, and it has taken on different blends of seasoning, largely depending on what things were happening here in our little valley.

For example, the bizarre romantic connection between Dewey and Emily led to a rewrite of the part where the book flashed back many years to when the duchess and the truck driver first met.

And when the truck driver’s son met the duchess’s daughter, 20-some years later, it was the courtship of Randy Jones and Katie Burchell that he patterned that after.

What is still left to solve, however, is what happens when the truck driver and the duchess discover that their children are sweet on each other because the kids happen to be half brother and sister.

And then, the guys at the coffee shop wanted to know why the truck driver, an American truck driver, was there driving below the duchess’ castle in Europe. At first he was just calling it a special assignment, but the guys wanted to know what the special assignment was, did he have to change his name for it, was he armed and did theme music play when he shifted gears.

Dud had already killed off a few characters early on in the book, so he believed he was under no obligation to bump off any more, but then the book is called “Murder in the Soggy Bottoms,” (which his friends think sounds like wet diapers) and the soggy bottoms are back in the good ol’ U.S. of A. and how was he going to get the duchess and her daughter across the foaming tide?

And as he walked and thought, Dud asked himself if really good writers like Balzac and Max Evans had to struggle like this. He nodded and smiled to himself.

Sometimes I’ll bet they just wanted to sit down, open a beer and watch football.

Hey, not a bad idea. Art does exact its price.

In memory of my mentor, pard and good friend, Max Evans. He used to “fist fight for fun.” Thankfully, not with me.

WalletHub: Virginia Beach, Chesapeake among best cities for jobs

The personal finance website WalletHub closed 2020 using 32 metrics ranging from job opportunities to employment growth to monthly average starting salary in a survey of 182 cities across the country aimed at determining how they ranked as the best or worst places in which to find a job, and the survey concluded that Virginia Beach ranked number three and Chesapeake, Va., ranked number seven.

The website noted that the jobs market took a huge hit in 2020 as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic. At one point, the unemployment rate reached a staggering 14.7%, but it has been steadily recovering. According to the most recent jobs report from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, the national unemployment rate is 6.7%, which still leaves plenty of Americans looking for jobs.

College graduates from the class of 2021 shouldn’t expect to see a boost in hiring compared to the class of 2020, but they also won’t experience much of a decrease either, according to the National Association of Colleges and Employers. NACE characterizes the outlook for college students as “more positive than expected,” given the circumstances of the COVID-19 pandemic.

With finding work depending largely on location, the survey listed the top ten cities for jobs in 2021 as 1) South Burlington, Vt. 2) Columbia, Md. 3) Virginia Beach 4) Salt Lake City, Utah 5) Boise, Idaho 6) Scottsdale, Ariz. 7) Chesapeake, Va. 8) Seattle, Wash. 9) Colorado Springs, Colo. and 10) Plano, Texas.

The 10 worst cities for jobs in 2021, according to the WalletHub survey are 173) New Haven, Conn. 174) Cleveland, Ohio 175) Gulfport, Miss. 176) Bridgeport, Conn. 177) Las Cruces, NM 178) North Las Vegas, Nev. 179) Brownsville, Texas 180) Detroit, Mich. 181) Shreveport, La. and 182) Hialeah, Fla.

Hosner, David Allen

David Allen Hosner died peacefully on Jan. 4, 2021, after a long, courageous battle with Crohn's Disease, followed by an insurmountable fight with gastric cancer.

David lovingly entered the heavenly gates with his wife, Patsy; his stepmother, Tenna; his friend, Silvia Jones, and pastor Kelly Shushock by his side.

Born on March 3, 1955 in Carbondale, Ill., David was a true friend to all. He graduated from Blacksburg High School and Ferrum College and attended Virginia Tech, majoring in Forestry. As a young man, David learned the electrical trade, wiring many homes in Blacksburg, including his own. He was employed by Virginia Tech for 41 years working in various positions in the Facilities Department. David was a life-time member of the Blacksburg Fire Department, serving for 48 years. He was also a member of the Blacksburg Rescue Service, serving for 12 years.

David greatly admired his father, John Hosner. In fact, John's military service in World War II led to a fascination with all things military, especially World War II stories. During his youth, David and his father John spent many hours fishing, hunting, and working together outdoors. In John's later years, David was often his father's sidekick helping him to break (John's wife) Tenna's "rules."

David loved his roots, spending almost every summer at his mother Irene's family farm in Ewing, Ill., with his late grandfather Rolla Neal, late uncle Bill

Neal, cousin Charles Neal and most of the Neal relatives. He would often go to Missouri to visit the Hosner side of the family.

In 1990, he married Patsy and spent the next 31 years with his partner in life, mowing grass, riding horses, traveling and just spending time together. They were true soulmates.

David was proud of his many accomplishments, especially his son, Jason, who now lives in Berlin, Germany. Although they were not always together as Jason grew up, David always supported Jason in his many endeavors.

David enjoyed riding his quarter horse, Penny, who Patsy often referred to as his "mistress." He also tinkered with a 1972 Super Beetle that he rebuilt in the mid-1990s swearing that it would be up and running any day and this time you would not smell like exhaust if you rode with him.

In addition to Patsy, David is survived by his son, Jason, and his husband Frédéric; his mother, Irene Hosner from Gilbert, Ariz.; stepmother Tenna Hosner from Blacksburg; sister, Angela Serody from Houston, Texas; a niece, Sara Serody from Houston; a nephew, Dylan Serody from New Orleans, La.; many cousins and friends including Charles and Barbara Neal of Ewing, Ill.; and beloved animals Elvis (shih tzu) and Penny (quarter horse). He is predeceased by his father, John F. Hosner. David loved and cherished them all.

The family wishes to thank the Blacksburg Volunteer Fire Department for their faithful friendship and support; the Blacksburg Volunteer Rescue Squad and Paris Mountain Stables (Rick and Elizabeth Hyde) for providing David with a final visit with his dear Penny Rose; Good Samaritan Hospice (especially Gwen Spangler); Dr. Jerome Goldschmidt and Dr. Tony Ringold and their staffs; the Kennedy Avenue neighbors; and Pastor Kelly Shushock for coming out of retirement to help us through David's final journey on earth.

In lieu of flowers, please consider making a donation to the Blacksburg Volunteer Fire Department or the Blacksburg Volunteer Rescue Squad. Due to COVID restrictions, a celebration of life will be held in September 2021.

Almighty God

Read Genesis 40:1 through 41:57

Joseph spent two years in a dungeon after interpreting the dreams of Pharaoh's cupbearer. Joseph had asked this man to mention him to the king upon being reinstated, but, as each day dragged on, no communication came from the Pharaoh. When Pharaoh had a dream and told it to all his wise men, no one could interpret it. The cupbearer finally remembered Joseph and told Pharaoh about him.

So Pharaoh sent for Joseph, and he was quickly brought from the dungeon. When he had shaved and changed his clothes, he came before Pharaoh (Genesis 41:14).

Joseph was going to be taken into the presence of the nation's highest ruler. His first order of business was to make himself presentable. His prison clothing and his haggard appearance were hardly appropriate to stand before royalty. Joseph prepared to see the king, honoring the authority and majesty of Pharaoh.

We have the privilege of an audience at any time with our King, Jesus Christ. May we never forget His majesty or approach Him with less than honor and adoration.

Thought for Today: Consider the majesty of God.

Athletic competition at county, Radford schools still shut down amid battle with COVID

Marty Gordon
NRVsports@ourvalley.org

Student-athletes in Montgomery County schools and at Radford High School are still waiting for a chance to play as local public schools battle COVID-19 by cancelling and postponing winter sporting events.

Danny Knott, director of human resources and athletics in the county, calls it a struggle every day. “We want to get our student-athletes playing. We just can’t right now,” he told school board members earlier this week.

It’s a battle many parents want changed. The “Let Them Play” movement was seen Tuesday night in the parking lot of the county administration building. Inside, the school board listened to Knott with open minds. Outside, youngsters stood in one accord with signs and chants asking the board to consider an exception to the current policy.

For now, the group and the school system are following a standard set late last year decreeing that if the positive number of COVID cases remains in the “high” category, sports will not be played. The problem for county student-athletes is that those numbers continue to show an upward swing and are in the “high number” category in terms of COVID-19 positive cases being reported in the county.

Montgomery County’s public schools are following “Return to Play Criteria” approved late last year. In addition, they are using the “Virginia High School Phase III Guidelines” as the COVID cases have not been trending down over the past two weeks.

“We continue to look at those numbers and monitor them as we move forward,” Knott said. For now, Montgomery County remains in the high-risk category. Once the metrics trend downward for a 14-day period, high school athletic competition can begin.

As of Wednesday morning, Virginia health officials have reported 377,300 coronavirus cases and 5,226 virus-related deaths since the pandemic began. This includes 5,387 new confirmed and probable diagnoses — marking the highest single-day spike in new cases since the start of the pandemic — and 35 new confirmed and probable fatalities across the commonwealth. Montgomery County has been averaging 30-40 new cases on a daily basis. The county has recorded a total of 5,398 cases, 115 hospitalizations and 43 deaths since the pandemic’s beginnings.

The “MCPS Return to Play Criteria” was approved by Region VI superintendents from Allegheny, Covington, Craig, Botetourt, Roanoke County, Roanoke City, Salem, Montgomery, Floyd, Franklin, Patrick, Henry, Martinsville, Pittsylvania and Danville. Botetourt recently pulled out of the plan and has begun some competition.

Montgomery County’s activity calendar for the high schools is littered with the cancellation and postponement of athletic events.

Knott said in most cases, county athletic directors are adjusting on a daily and weekly basis. According to Knott, the AD’s are typically told on Friday if they can begin play in the next week. Recently, however, the school system has pushed the scheduling out for two weeks because of the coronavirus metrics currently in place.

The Virginia High School League, which governs the state’s public schools, is still sticking to a shortened winter season, which would conclude in mid-February. By then, a shortened “fall” season would commence and would last for approximately nine weeks before the true spring sports seasons would begin.

The “Let Them Play” movement includes a new Facebook page that has been flooded with comments and videos from parents and athletes.

Some of those individuals addressed the school board during the public address session Tuesday. Christiansburg senior wrestler Kyle Keister is one of those who remains in limbo this winter.

“With wrestling, you really need to get as much time on the mat as you can because that’s where most of your technique is going to come from,” Keister said. “For people like me who have been wrestling only a couple of years, I get most of my practice time on the mat and I need it.”

Keister said that in many cases like his, athletics gives the students a chance to gain a scholarship to further their education. For now, he is not being given the opportunity to impress college recruiters who might be watching from afar.

Kate Henley, whose son Caleb plays basketball and football at Christiansburg High School, expressed similar sentiment. Athletics, she said, in some cases gives the student-athletes extra motivation to get better grades and impress college coaches.

Across the river in Radford, the boys’ basketball program shut down its day-to-day activities and contests after at least five players reported some type of COVID-19 contact. Hopes are that competition can resume next Monday.

The Rusty Wallace Racing Experience has found a new home at Motor Mile Speedway in Radford. Starting in April, the public can have first-hand experiences in Late-Model cars and dragsters.

Have you ever wondered what it would be like behind the wheel of a race car? Now, you have the chance at Motor Mile Speedway near Radford.

Late last year, Motor Mile Speedway entered into a landmark agreement with The Rusty Wallace Racing Experience. Under the agreement, which includes a multi-year lease, RWRE will assume control of venue operations with Motor Mile Speedway and Dragway becoming the home track of the Rusty Wallace Racing Experience and its companion companies. This includes the acclaimed Pure Speed Drag Racing Experience.

Mark Ebert, president and CEO of Rusty Wallace Racing Experience (RWRE), said The Experience can’t wait to combine the amazing facility at Motor Mile with a full slate of racing on the oval and dragstrip plus the interactive opportunities for the fans to get behind the wheel of a NASCAR style Late Model rear engine dragster or into one of the company’s racing go-karts.

RWRE is the largest racing school in the country, offering NASCAR-

style driving experiences at over 80 tracks in the United States and Canada. Founded in 2005, the North Carolina-based company boasts a diverse collection of driving schools.

“Our NASCAR style driving experience will be offered in a NASCAR style Late Model with the Rusty Wallace Racing Experience. Our dragster experience will be offered on the dragstrip with our Pure Speed Drag Racing Experience,” Ebert said.

Motor Mile Speedway celebrated its 31st anniversary as a NASCAR-sanctioned short track in 2020.

Ebert describes the racing experience at Motor Mile as amazing, giving race fans the chance to experience racing first-hand.

“Our Late Models run the same chassis, brakes and tires that they see our top teams running on Saturday night,” Ebert said. “It’s the chance to really see what it really feels like to turn laps at Motor Mile. On the Pure Speed side, it’s the magic of driving a real rear-engine dragster. There’s something special about a dragster, and behind the wheel of one of these awesome machines is where we will be putting drivers.”

The management group is adding a new cart track along the hillside of turn 4 of the oval track.

“We are repurposing part of the dragstrip parking lot for part of the karting track, and then we contracted with Norwood Development to build a new portion of additional kart track,” Ebert said. “It is cut into the hillside behind turn 4 of the oval track including one long banked corner that’s cut into the hillside and is just awesome.”

The karting track will have multiple lanes to allow for some great side-by-side racing and passing. The facility will have three different variations in size ranging from 1/8th mile to just shy of 1/2 mile.

“We will generally use the largest configuration but will use the smaller configurations depending upon other activities at the racetrack and the need for parking,” Ebert said.

Plans call for the expansion of the track’s concessions with new open-air seating overlooking the race track for the cost of a regular dinner.

“We will be working very hard to make both the dragstrip and the speedway interactive on race night with an active midway, show cars, food trucks and more, and the idea of adding karting to everything else provides more fun for the whole family,” Ebert said.

The racing experiences and karting track are scheduled to open the first week in April.

Ride-alongs start at $59, and driving experiences start at $99 for dragsters and circle track. Karting will start at $15 per race with multiple race packages available taking the price down to just $9 per race.

Additionally, the karting track will be open for “date night” starting on Thursdays and Fridays in April. Customers can buy a kart race along with dinner and a soft drink for just $48 for two.

Participants in the driving programs must be at least 18 years old. In the ride-along programs, riders must be at least 14 and must be accompanied by a parent or legal guardian.
