Radford loses community icon with passing of George Harvey, Sr.

RADFORD - The City of Radford lost a community icon with the recent passing of George M. Harvey, Sr.

Among his many contributions to the city was his support of Radford university, and the university released the following tribute to Harvey.

“Radford University shared the news of the passing of George M. Harvey, Sr., a business owner, community leader, and University supporter. In celebrating George’s life and legacy, the university pays tribute to his long and successful business career, family dedication, and community involvement.

“After serving in the U.S. Army and taking classes at the National Business College in Roanoke, George was always self-employed. He began his professional career owning a service station, then a used car dealership, gas distributorship, and a new car business. With each business success, he would use his profits to invest in the next and even more successful business. “In 1959, George founded what we know today as Harvey’s Chevrolet. In 1989, TIME Magazine named George a Quality Dealer Award finalist, and his selection was announced by TIME Magazine at the National Automobile Dealers Association (NADA) Convention in New Orleans on January 28, 1989. He was only one of 10 dealers nationwide to be named a finalist for his outstanding business performance and exceptional community service.

News Brief: Radford Police investigating fraud incident

The City of Radford Police Department is urging local citizens to be wary in the wake of a fraud incident in which the victim was contacted by suspects pretending to be members of the Radford City Police Department and Radford City Sheriff’s Office.

Contacted by telephone, the victim was instructed to go to various businesses and purchase pre-paid credit cards, then provide the card numbers to the suspect in order to avoid prosecution and arrest.

The police department and the sheriff’s department remind Radford’s citizens that law enforcement personnel will never request payment over the phone to clear arrest warrants. Caller ID can mimic a legitimate number when in fact the call is fraudulent.

Law enforcement personnel urge citizens suspecting a telephone scam to report the call to the local police department, the sheriff’s office, and the federal trade commission at ftc.gov.

Longtime seventh-district delegate Nick Rush won’t seek re-election

Nick Rush, who has served as the seventh district representative to the Virginia House of Delegates since 2011, announced earlier this week in a Facebook post that he will not seek re-election this fall.

Rush represents the New River Valley as the seventh district is composed of Floyd, Montgomery and Pulaski counties.

“It is with great appreciation to the voters of the Seventh House District that I formally announce my decision to not seek re-election this November for the Virginia House of Delegates,” Rush posted. “It has been a true honor and incredible privilege to have served in the General Assembly for the past 10 years, and I will forever be humbled by the trust placed in me to carry out the people’s work.”

He was appointed to the most powerful money committee in the Virginia House of Delegates, the Committee on Appropriations. He also chaired the Higher Education Subcommittee.

Rush represented Southwest Virginia as Vice Chairman of the Major Economic Investment Project Approval Commission and as a member of the Joint Sub-committee to Study Mental Health Services in the 21st Century.

When the Republican Party was the majority party in the House of Delegates, Rush served as the Republican whip.

He looked back upon his time in office with great pride with several accomplishments.

“We strengthened the New River Valley and

Honoring Women’s History Month in Radford

March is Women’s History Month, and Mayor David Horton is continuing the tradition he began for Black History Month in Radford.

Horton will be posting weekly, each Wednesday, on his personal Facebook page featuring an aspect of Radford-oriented women’s history throughout March. He began his posts Wednesday, featuring pioneer Mary Draper Ingles.

He writes: “March is #WomensHistoryMonth and each Wednesday I would like to feature #radfordwomenshistory.”

“Today, March 3, 2021, we feature Mary Draper Ingles who was one of the most famous women of her time as she was taken from her family, was forced to travel to near the area now known as Cincinnati Ohio, escaped captivity, and traveled back on foot to SWVA by following the river, finally settling with her family in what is today part of Radford.

“This is just a very brief synopsis of her incredible story and her life is worthy of greater exploration available at <https://www.marydraperinglestrail.com/about-mary>.

“Her descendants still proudly share her story here in Radford and her legacy has inspired generations.”

According to www.marydraperinglestrail.com:

Mary Draper Ingles was “born in Philadelphia in 1732 to Irish immigrants. She, along with her family, became part of the western migration as settlers moved down The Great Wagon Road into Virginia. Eventually she married William Ingles and settled in Drapers Meadows in what is present-day Blacksburg.

“While many parts of the frontier were in the grips of the French and Indian War, the New River Valley residents didn’t have reason to fear the parties of American Native Indians, who passed

Radford University named a military friendly school

U.S. Army veteran/RU student Frank Fleming says the support he has received from the school has been “amazing.”

Radford University has been designated a 2021-2022 Military Friendly School, demonstrating the university’s commitment to supporting and empowering veteran students and active military service members and their families in the classroom and beyond with exceptional, transformative experiences.

Now in its 11th year, the Military Friendly Schools list sets the standard for higher education institutions to provide the best opportunities for veterans and service members and their families. Radford University has regularly landed on the prestigious list since 2011.

Institutions earning the Military Friendly School designation were evaluated using both public data sources and responses from a proprietary survey completed by the school. More than 1,000 schools participated in the 2021-2022 survey with 625 schools earning the designation from every state in the country.

The 2021-2022 Military Friendly Schools list will be published in the May issue of G.I. Jobs magazine. The list can also be found at www.militaryfriendly.com.

“We are extremely honored to receive this designation,” said Deanna Mabe, director of the Radford University Military Resource Center (MRC). “We strive to extend a warm welcome to all who have served or are currently serving our country, as well as to the spouses and dependents of service members. This recognition and the continued enrollment of these students is proof that our community values their service and welcomes them to the Radford family.”

Located in Russell Hall, the MRC is one of many campus resources for veterans at Radford University, providing information, resources,

VT’s Civil War Weekend goes virtual for the first time with free events in March

President Abraham Lincoln on the battlefield of Antietam, 1862. Courtesy of the National Archives.

Down the long spiral of violence America fell.

The other. The enemy. The traitor. Americans drew lines of acceptance and lines of battle.

Ultimately, the war ended. The 13th Amendment abolished the heinous act of slavery. But numerous moments in the 156 years since the Civil War demonstrate how deeply divided the nation remains on matters of human rights and social justice.

“When one group of people sees the other as the enemy, it’s hard to break from that cycle. This was true in the 1850s, and I believe it’s true today,” said Paul Quigley, the James I. Robertson Jr. Associate Pro-

Ohio Valley on their way to fight the Catawbas farther south. At least, not until a day in July 1755 when members of the settlement were killed, and Mary and other family members were captured by the Shawnees and taken hundreds of miles into the frontier wilderness.

“However, this remarkable woman summoned tremendous physical and mental strength as she escaped from her captors and walked through Kentucky, West Virginia, and Virginia, navigating only through memory and by following significant waterways (the Ohio, Kanawha, and New Rivers), back to her home valley. Later she and her husband moved to the Radford area where they established a homestead and ferry operation. Mary lived here until her death in 1815.

“What transpired between these life episodes is a story that has been told and retold through books and articles, an outdoor drama, and at festivals and living history reenactments throughout a four-state region. Her story will inspire you.”

fessor of Civil War History at Virginia Tech.

If progress is not a straight line but a winding road, history can provide the road-map.

Amid a trying time in the United States, renowned historians will provide insights into the deadliest conflict on American soil as part of the 2021 Civil War Weekend at Virginia Tech.

For the first time in the 30-year history of Civil War Weekend, attendees can participate in this celebrated gathering from anywhere — at no cost.

“The COVID-19 pandemic foiled our original plans for marking the 30th anniversary of Virginia Tech’s Civil War Weekend,” said Quigley, who also serves as the director of the Virginia Center for Civil War Studies. “But we are making the best of a tough situation and are thrilled to open this annual event to an even broader audience.”

Historians, history buffs, and anyone else interested in learning about the Civil War will meet via Zoom on Thursday, March 11, and Thursday, March 18. Each gathering will occur from 7 to 8:30 p.m. Attendees will have ample opportunities to ask questions, a staple of Civil War Weekend.

The theme of the Virtual Civil War Weekend is “Resources for War.” Nine expert historians will explore overlooked but crucial elements of the conflict, from nourishment and clothing to the millions of horses and mules that provided transportation.

Attendees will learn how soldiers and their families coped with the heartache and trauma by communicating with one another through photographs and letters. The historians will even explore how soldiers and civilians sometimes argued over how the war should be remembered.

The speaker lineup includes Emmanuel Dabney, a historian at the Petersburg National Battlefield whose ancestors include slaveholders, free and enslaved Black people, and non-slaveholding white people.

William C. “Jack” Davis, the author of more than 50 books on the Civil War and Southern history and the former executive director of the Virginia Center for Civil War Studies.

Angelo Esco Elder, a former postdoctoral fellow in the Virginia Center for Civil War Studies whose research explores gender, emotion, family, and trauma in the Civil War Era South.

David Gerleman, a 19th century historian and an emeritus assistant editor of “The Papers of Abraham Lincoln.”

Hilary Green, author of “Educational Reconstruction: African American Schools in the Urban South, 1865-1890.”

Kurt Luther, an associate professor of computer science and history at Virginia Tech who created the Civil War Photo Sleuth website, which uses crowdsourcing and facial recognition to identify unknown soldiers.

Caroline Wood Ne-whall, the Virginia Center for Civil War Studies postdoctoral fellow, who analyzes the experiences of Black Civil War soldiers who became prisoners of war in the Confederacy.

Dana B. Shoaf, editor of Civil War Times magazine, who researches the impact of the percussion cap on the tactics of the Civil War.

Sarah Jones Weicksel, director of research and publications at the American Historical Association and author of several works, including an upcoming book focused on how American used clothing to wage war against one another across a wide range of battle-fronts.

“We are honored to bring together Civil War historians who represent diverse backgrounds and stages of their careers,” said Quigley. “These talented scholars and storytellers will help us explore the ‘Resources for War’ theme of the program, from the invention of the Minié ball bullet, which changed warfare dramatically, to the critical resource of human labor that both sides needed so desperately.”

Created by James I. “Bud” Robertson Jr., the legendary founder of the Virginia Center for Civil War Studies, the Civil War Weekend has united thousands of curious minds in Blacksburg since 1991. Last March, Quigley planned to dedicate Civil War Weekend to honor the life of Robertson, who passed away in late 2019. But the rise of COVID-19 cases in the United States forced the cancellation of Civil War Weekend 2020.

Quigley said he’s hopeful for an opportunity to dedicate Civil War Weekend 2022 to Robertson as part of a return to in-person programming and Virginia Tech’s Sesquicentennial celebration.

advocacy and support for military members as they transition from military to civilian life. By providing these students with a network of friends and resources to support them during that transition, they are more likely to fully embrace their experiences as Highlanders and succeed on campus and in their careers.

“The support at Radford University for veterans has been amazing,” said Frank Fleming, a student in the Radford University Carilion Biomedical Science program and a U.S. Army veteran. “I’ve gotten assistance with VA benefits processing, financial aid, student work study jobs, one-on-one tutoring, study space arrangement and academic advising sessions. There are just countless resources for people like me that have made my educational journey great. I couldn’t ask for more.”

The Military Friendly Schools list is released annually by VIQTOY, a service-disabled, veteran-owned small business that connects the military community to civilian employment and educational and entrepreneurial opportunities through its G.I. Jobs, Military Spouse and Military Friendly brands.

WalletHub: Virginia is least safe state during pandemic

The personal finance website WalletHub Thursday released the results of its report on the safest and least safe states and reported that Virginia is the least safe during the pandemic.

To find out the safest states during the COVID-19 pandemic, WalletHub compared the 50 states and the District of Columbia across five key metrics: COVID-19 transmission rate, positive testing rate, hospitalization rate, death rate, and vaccination rate.

Virginia's rankings in four of the key metrics, as reported by the website, are vaccinate rate: 23; positive testing rate: 34; hospitalization rate: 39; and death rate: 51.

According to the survey the five least safe states/districts during the pandemic are Delaware, the District of Columbia, New York, Georgia and Virginia.

The survey reported the five safest states to be Alaska, Hawaii, North Dakota, New Mexico and South Dakota.

The website pointed out that as the U.S. works to get the COVID-19 pandemic under control, staying safe is one of Americans' top concerns. Safety is also essential for getting the economy back on track as the lower COVID-19 transmission and deaths are in a state, the more that state is able to eliminate restrictions on businesses. The United States will only be able to fully get back to life as normal once most of the population is vaccinated against coronavirus, and it will still be months before that is achieved. The U.S. is off to a slow start so far, as only 7.9% of the population had been fully vaccinated against COVID-19 (received both doses) as of March 2.

An invisible, unregulated killer is running wild among us

Saw a while back where a high school kid came up with the idea for a science project to illustrate how information and ignorance can be twisted and used for specific purposes by special interest groups. He surveyed 50 people about a particular compound, and after his presentation, 47 of them said it should be banned. Only two said it shouldn't. Number 50 apparently wound up lost in space or something.

What the student came up with was this compound called dihydrogen monoxide or DMHO. If 47 out of 50 people felt it should be banned, then the key question is why something hasn't been done about this invisible, uncontrolled killer that obviously is a threat to us all.

The primary reason, of course, is that, dangerous or no, DMHO is crucial to many manufacturing processes. Big money will always win out over the health and welfare of us unimportant everyday people.

In its natural state, this insidious compound is odorless, tasteless, and colorless. And it is indeed extremely dangerous. It kills thousands of people every year through accidental inhalation. But it's capable of other damage without killing.

For instance, prolonged exposure to this stuff in its solid form causes irreparable destruction of human tissue. As a gas, contact with it burns human skin.

But wait, there's more. Simple ingestion of two much of this substance causes excessive sweating and urination, nausea, vomiting and body electrolyte imbalance. How's that for a checklist of bodily horrors?

But wait, there's still more. The dangers of DHMO go far beyond mere ingestion. It is a major contributor to acid rain and the much ballyhooed greenhouse effect. Further, it accelerates the corrosion and rusting of many metals, has been known to cause electrical failures, and has been found in excised tumors of terminal cancer patients.

The scariest part of all is that this junk is virtually everywhere. No matter where we turn, it threatens us. Its pollution is so global it has even been discovered in Antarctic ice.

DHMO is so unregulated that the American military establishment has spent fortunes designing devices to use it during warfare. Military installations across the country receive tons of it through highly sophisticated underground distribution networks. Many bases even store large quantities of it for later use.

So why hasn't our constantly overreaching government done something about this nefarious compound? Because as awful as DMHO may sound when only one side of the story is presented as that perceptive student did, life as we know it could not exist without it. It's water.

The moral of the student's presentation is a lesson I'm not sure we've learned very well: That when a special interest group reveals to us one slanted part of the story, we should always question them persistently enough to make them reveal the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

The author is a man of a certain age who has gotten increasingly suspicious as he's gotten older. His effect, he believes, is to make him less prey to any half-truth or patent nonsense some frenzied zealot may try to convince him of. Not a bad result.

WalletHub study: Virginia has the most coronavirus restrictions

As the personal finance website WalletHub points out, the country still has a long way to go to reach a full reopening with businesses and life back to what it used to be. In the meantime, many states still have restrictions on businesses and gatherings.

To determine the states with the fewest (and the most) coronavirus restrictions, WalletHub compared the 50 states and the District of Columbia across 14 key metrics. Their result showed that Virginia is the state with the most coronavirus restrictions.

The metrics WalletHub used for purposes of the survey's comparison were the presence or absence of a requirement that a face mask be worn in public, the presence or absence of travel restrictions, the presence or absence of policies banning large gatherings, the status of public school reopening, the status of restaurant and bar reopenings, whether the state has issued guidance on customer health checks at restaurants, whether mandatory closings to the public of non-essential businesses have been imposed, the presence or absence of legislation ensuring businesses immunity against liability for any harm caused by COVID-19, whether the state has required or recommended working from home, whether a state has required or recommended workplace temperature screening, whether a state has imposed mandatory quarantine policies, whether a state is participating in a multi-state agreement or regional partnership, whether or not state guidance for hospitals and other medical facilities to reschedule nonessential surgeries to ease the demand for medical supplies during the coronavirus crisis is still in place, and the absence or presence of guidance for assisted living facilities related to COVID-19.

The top 10 states with the fewest coronavirus restrictions, according to the WalletHub survey are 1. Iowa 2. South Carolina 3. Oklahoma 4. Idaho 5. South Dakota 6. Alaska 7. Utah 8. Florida 9. Tennessee 10. Montana.

The ten states with the most coronavirus restrictions according to the website's survey, are 50. Virginia 49. Vermont 48. Hawaii 47. California 46. Massachusetts 45. North Carolina 44. New Mexico 43. Colorado 42. Washington 41. Connecticut.

Virginia, Maryland chosen for speed management pilot programs

Virginia and Maryland have been selected to receive $100,000 each to develop, implement, and evaluate speed management pilot programs with the goal of reducing speeding. Maryland's project will be located in a rural setting while Virginia's will be in an urban area.

Three national roadway safety organizations — the Governors Highway Safety Association (GHSA), Insurance Institute for Highway Safety (IIHS) and National Road Safety Foundation (NRSF) — are partnering to fund the projects and an evaluation of their effectiveness.

The goal is to develop a template for effective speed reduction strategies that can be duplicated in other states and communities. Speeding is a leading factor in motor vehicle deaths; more than 9,000 people die each year as a result of speeding-related crashes.

“Though speed management has been a problem for decades, speeding became even more acute during the COVID-19 pandemic as less traffic has prompted some motorists to drive at high speeds on highways and city streets across the nation,” said GHSA Executive Director Jonathan Adkins. “Enforcement challenges, rising speed limits — which IIHS research confirms have cost thousands of lives — and public acceptance of speeding create a demand for new strategies.”

“Speeding is one of the long-term problems in highway safety, and the pandemic has thrown it into stark relief,” said IIHS President David Harkey. “Unfortunately, this problem won't go away when the pandemic ends. By working with other road safety groups, we can use these initiatives to speak with one voice to keep the attention focused on one of the most common factors in serious crashes.”

Reducing vehicle speeds is a central component of a comprehensive approach to preventing injuries and deaths in crashes known as “safe systems.” The safe systems approach focuses on how road user behavior, road design and operation, vehicle design, and emergency response all must work together to make roads safer for everyone who uses them. Speed is an overarching factor within this model that is critical for creating a safe road environment.

“Speeding has always been a major factor in teen traffic deaths, and the fact that roads are less crowded during the pandemic is a recipe for disaster,” says Michelle Anderson, NRSF Director of Operations. “Young people, who are less experienced behind the wheel, may see the open roads as an invitation to speed. But driving is a skill that requires good judgement, which is why we have dedicated ourselves to engaging young people to use their creativity to develop messages that speak to their peers and adults to be responsible drivers.”

The partnership among GHSA, IIHS, and NRSF to support the pilot programs in Maryland and Virginia was conceived following an April 2019 national forum hosted by IIHS and GHSA that brought together a diverse group of stakeholders to discuss ways to address the speeding problem.

Southwest Virginia's economic impact well beyond our regional borders and throughout the entire commonwealth, country, and global arena,” Rush said. “We did this through items like the Tech Talent Investment Program, which is now providing for 31,000 new technology degrees to students attending Virginia Tech and other state universities for the next 10 years; the Jefferson College of Health Sciences merger with Radford University, which has positioned RU to be a top producer of nursing, health, and human services while providing for greater access to continuing and future research, collaboration, and greater educational opportunities for students and other regional stakeholders; and the 10-10-10 Plan, which appropriated millions of dollars to struggling rural public schools in the commonwealth, including many in rural Southwest Virginia.”

“In addition to being a successful businessman, George was fully dedicated to his family and the community. He held positions on boards of directors in the areas of health-care, banking, education, and community organizations. He proudly and skillfully served as the second president of the Radford University Foundation Board of Directors and was a current member of the Capital Campaign Steering Committee.

“Radford University President Brian O. Hemphill, Ph.D., who became close friends with George over the years, said, “Today, our campus, community, and Commonwealth mourn the loss of a business pioneer, family man, and incredible friend. George served as a successful business owner and caring community leader with unbelievable distinction for more than 70 years. He will forever be remembered as a true statesman and beloved Highlander. The Radford family will deeply miss George, his warm personality, and his engaging stories. His monumental legacy will live on through his loving family and our fond memories.”

“During the Spring 2017 Commencement, George was publicly recognized by the university for his many contributions. On Moffett Lawn in front of more than 10,000 attendees, President Hemphill bestowed upon George an honorary Bachelor of Business Administration degree in recognition of his lifetime achievement in the business sector and faithful service to his local community.

“The 2017 ceremony and deserving recognition marked an important and special moment for George and his family. George M. Harvey, Jr. was in the audience to see his father receive an honorary degree. “Dad has worked extremely hard his whole life for business and the community, and this is well-deserved,” he said at the time. The ceremony was yet another sign of success for Brad Harvey, who said that his father’s success came from the way he treated people. “Dad would say always tell the truth, be honest and good things will come.”

“Immediately after receiving his honorary degree, George took to the podium to share his passion for Radford University and its mission of access and opportunity. He said, “The most important part of Radford University is its students. Radford University is here to give all of the students a quality education at a reasonable price. To me, that is the number one priority.” His commitment to students was followed by his passion for the institution. He added, “We want the university to prosper and grow”

In 2018, the year after George earned an honorary degree, George received yet another honor as the university proudly dedicated and officially opened the Harvey Knowledge Center, which is located on the fourth floor of McConnell Library and represents a combination of the Harvey Learning Center, established in 1997, and the Warren P. Self Learning Assistance Resource Center, or LARC. The Harvey Knowledge Center provides an array of helpful resources for both students and faculty, including small and private study areas, one-on-one academic coaching, study groups, and other forms of group collaboration and workshops designed to help students become lifelong learners.

“In reflecting on George’s legacy and impact, President Hemphill stated, “George’s career and life truly embodied his unwavering commitment to serving others. There is no way the Radford family could adequately express its everlasting appreciation and sincere gratitude for George, but we certainly took advantage of several opportunities to highlight his larger than life accomplishments and his love for his wife Juanita, children, grandchildren, and extended family of loved ones.”

“President Hemphill also said, “George’s unwavering dedication to the community and the institution had no limit! As a campus and a community, we are better because George was a part of our journey. As an individual, my life has forever been positively impacted by my close friendship with George in recent years and in his final days. We express our deepest condolences to the Harvey family. However, as a Radford family, we find comfort in knowing that George’s family will carry on his far-reaching impact and undeniable legacy.”

WORSHIP DIRECTORY

Families Deserve Respect

Read Numbers 1:1 through 2:34

In our fragmented families today, it is difficult to understand the closeness of Israelite families. They worked together, lived in the same area, and had tribal leaders who counseled them, taught them God’s Law, and arbitrated their disputes. God appointed a leader from each tribe to help Moses count the men of his tribe. God also told them where to arrange their tents so each tribe lived together. By living so closely together, they must have learned a great deal about getting along with one another.

So the Israelites did every thing the Lord commanded Moses; that is the way they encamped under their standards, and that is the way they set out, each of them with their clan and family (Numbers 2:34).

In today’s society, respect is often a missing ingredient in families. Often, families intentionally live a distance from each other so they don’t have to spend much time together. Maybe we should return to the Israelite model and learn to appreciate and depend on one another more.

Thought for Today: The family structure is important to God.

Blacksburg High's Parker Epperley honored by Virginia Sports Hall of Fame

Blacksburg High School junior Parker Epperley was one of 16 student-athletes from across the state to receive recognition from the Virginia Sports Hall of Fame Foundation as one of the finalists for the Student-Athlete Achievement Awards.

A reception held virtually via Zoom and Facebook Live featured high school student-athletes from across Virginia that excel academically, athletically, and in their communities.

The hall received 115 nominations from August through October 2020 from which the sixteen finalists were chosen by an awards selection committee. From the eight girls and eight boys, the committee picked two from each group as the Hall of Fame's Student Athletes of the Year.

Epperley has been an A-B honor roll student since the third grade. As a freshman, he won the regional livestock judging contest at Virginia Tech for his age group. At Blacksburg, he has played football, baseball, and basketball. He was the ESPN Blacksburg Football Player of the Game twice as a sophomore.

He has created his own tilling and gardening business growing plants in a greenhouse and tilling around 50 gardens in Virginia and West Virginia.

With high school athletics put on hold in Virginia because of the pandemic, many of this year's finalists took the opportunity to further their commitment to their communities by creating projects and initiatives to help those in need.

In addition to the scholarship awards provided to the four Student-Athletes of the Year, each remaining finalist received a $500 scholarship.

The additional funds are the result of a year-end appeal campaign for the Hall of Fame aimed at increasing the scholarships provided for student-athletes.

"Student-athletes have endured so much as a result of the pandemic," said Virginia Sports Hall of Fame Executive Director Will Driscoll. "We wanted to make sure we continued this initiative that celebrates their overall accomplishments even if games aren't being played."

Since 1972, the Virginia Sports Hall of Fame has honored Virginia's contributions to the world of sports. As the commonwealth's official hall of fame, its mission is to honor athletic excellence and to serve as a nonprofit resource highlighting philanthropy through sports while inspiring sports fans through programming and engaging entertainment.

Local wrestling club takes wrestling association state championship

A Christiansburg wrestling club brought home plenty of gold this week after a state tournament in Virginia Beach. Elite Wrestling, the home of the Christiansburg Blue Demon wrestling club, brought home the Virginia Wrestling Association (VAWA) state title and two divisional championship banners.

Overall, Elite scored 515.5 total points, far ahead of second place Smith Mt. Lake's 351 points. The group had 28 place winners, nine of whom were individual state champions: Jackson Crowder, Brady Hand, Barrett Collins, Reid Stiltner, Reza Massjouni, Bryar Asbury, Leland Altizer, Jesse McGraw and Logan Rose.

Elite second-place finishers in the state tournament were Carter Hudson, Titus Bolen, Stephen Bolen and Derek Bush. Earning third-place finishes were Jake Robie, Chandler Webb, Evan Mefford, J.J. Pociask, Molly Keller, Elan Catoe and Talan Hall.

Finishing in fourth place were Steven Bolen and Ian Ray, and achieving fifth-place finishes were Dilling Collins and Jacob Smeltzer. Sixth-place finishers were Zack Hudson, Nic Hamm, Randy Winnans and Jackson Mann.

The Virginia Tech Hokies are the 2021 ACC men's indoor champs, winning with the largest margin of victory in the modern era.

The Virginia Tech men's track and field squad won its sixth ACC indoor championship Saturday, winning by 55 points over second-place North Carolina, the largest margin of victory in the league's modern era.

The title was the 17th overall for the Hokies' track and field program.

"This championship was a total team effort by our men," said Director of Track and Field Dave Cianelli. "We had contributors from almost every event. The athletes were prepared and focused to come here and win this title."

In the mile run, Fitsum Seyoum, Ethan Mills, and Tyler Leeser all delivered personal bests for the Hokies. Patrick Forrest set career records in both the prelims and the finals of the 400 meters. Thierry Siewe Yanga set a personal record of 1:50.36 in the 800 meters, and Cole Beck's 6.74 in the 60 meters contributed fifth-place points for the Hokies.

The Hokie gold medalists:

Jacory Patterson in the 200 meters and the 400 meters. He repeated as the league champion of both events and won the 400 meters for the third straight year. Patterson broke his own school record in the preliminaries with a time of 20.66 before surpassing it again on Saturday with a gold-medal-winning 20.62. With a 45.38 in the finals, Patterson earned the 2021 ACC Indoor Championships Men's Track

MVP award.

Bashir Mosavel-Lo, 800 meters. In one of the most exciting races of the meet, the Richmond native stretched at the finish to hold off the pack and become the ACC champion. Posting a time of 1:48.34, a career best, Mosavel-Lo added a gold medal to his reputation as one of the best distance runners in Hokies' history.

Antonio Lopez Segura, 5000 meters. Lopez Segura never broke his stride, biding his time until he blew through the pack and never looking back until the gold medal was in his hands. With his winning time of 13:49.86, the Spaniard broke the Clemson Indoor Track facility record and the ACC Indoor Championships record and moved into third in Virginia Tech history.

Tyler Leeser, Patrick Forrest, Dave Whitfield, and Ben Nibbelink, distance medley relay. Showcasing the depth and talent of the distance crew, the men's distance medley relay team breezed past the rest of the conference to win the gold medal with a time of 9:41.87.

The Hokie silver medalists:

Chauncey Chambers, triple jump. Chambers earned the first medal for the Hokies on Saturday, placing second in the triple jump with a career-best mark, earning first team All-ACC honors and moving into third all-time in Tech's record book.

Tyson Jones, shot put. Competing in one of the best shot put events the ACC has ever seen, Jones took the silver medal.

Ben Nibbelink, 3000 meters. The junior from Leesburg battled against a strong field of 34 entrants and produced a career best time of 7:56.88 to earn the silver medal and first-team All-ACC honors.

Harrison Rice, pole vault. Rice improved his third-place finish from last year's ACC Indoor Championships with a silver medal. He earned first-team All-ACC honors.

The Hokie bronze medalists: Sean Murphy, heptathlon. With five personal bests across the heptathlon's seven events, Sean Murphy smashed the all-time Tech record in the event with 5,350 points, earning the bronze medal.

Aidan Clark, high jump. Earlier in the season at the VT challenge, freshman Clark became just the third Hokie in history to clear seven feet. His jump of 6' 11.75" at the championships earned him a bronze medal.

Ben Fleming, mile. A Blacksburg native, Fleming brought the bronze medal back to his hometown with a time of 4:00.01, which earned him first-team All-ACC honors. He was one of four Hokies to break the four-minute mark during the season.
