Sen. John Edwards, delegate Jason Ballard introduce $1,000,000 appropriation bill for Edgar A. Long Building

Democrat Senator John Edwards and Republican delegate Jason Ballard have introduced a $1,000,000 budget appropriation to the Senate and the House respectively to preserve and reopen the Edgar A. Long Building.

The Edgar A. Long Building is a two-and-a-half-story, brick structure built in 1927 on the 20th-century campus of the Christiansburg Industrial Institute. The Friends Freedmen's Association of Philadelphia first sponsored education for emancipated slaves by financing construction of the Old Christiansburg Industrial Institute's Hill School and Schaeffer Memorial Baptist Church in the 1880s.

The Friends Freedmen's Association then turned to famed educator Booker T. Washington, who advised them on the purchase of Montgomery County farmland for a 20th-century campus for the agricultural and industrial instruction of African American students. The Edgar A. Long Building has statewide significance as the only pre-1950 building that stands on its original site at the campus, begun in the early 1900s as a regional center for secondary and higher education of African Americans.

"Our team has been working with both Senator Edwards's and Delegate Ballard's office, advocating for their support in introducing a budget appropriation to the General Assembly for the preservation and reopening of the Edgar A. Long Building," said Chris Sanchez, CI, Inc.'s executive director.

"We're very excited to see that a bipartisan budget appropriation has been submitted, and we're confident elected representatives in state government will recognize that the meaningful reinvestment

Bobcat Theatre Company presents "Our Town" this upcoming weekend

RADFORD – The Bobcat Theatre Company will be presenting "Our Town" this weekend in a series of performances at the Radford High School auditorium.

"Our Town" is widely considered one of the most beloved plays of all time. Written by Thornton Wilder in 1938, the play showcases 12 years in the town of Grover's Corners, New Hampshire at the start of the 20th century, and centers on the love story of main characters George and Emily. "This production, produced by Bobcat Theatre Company features, 17 cast members and several crew, and is a stripped down play that features a minimal set, minimal costume pieces, and the actors barely leave the stage during the whole run," said Casey Worley, Director of Theatre Arts for RHS.

The show is being directed by Erin Wilson, a senior at Radford High School, and Worley, and features student actors in grades 7-12. The play also features four adult actors

- two faculty members of RHS, Cam Sellers and Megan Thompson, and two community members, McKinley Rorrer and Wendy Wilson.

Radford mother continues to heal after being hit by car in December

Heather Bell

RADFORD – A Radford single mother of three is continuing to recover after being hit by a car while riding her bicycle to work in December.

Areli Mendez, of Radford, was bicycling to work at night on Dec. 14 when she was hit by a car on Route 11 in Pulaski County. She was taken to Carilion Roanoke Memorial Hospital, where she stayed for weeks recovering from multiple broken bones, deep wounds and other injuries. Two fractured vertebrae, broken ribs, and a broken fibula, right hip, and right pubic bone, a concussion and brain bleeds are the most significant of those many injuries. From the hospital, she went to rehabilitation center before returning to her Radford apartment in mid-January.

Mendez has no health insurance and cannot work due to her injuries, and bills are mounting up. Her close friend, Jae

De La Mora, has taken in Mendez's children while she recovers and is a daily constant in Mendez's life, providing meals, transportation to appointments and the like, as well as keeping her spirits up. Just getting her in and out of her second story apartment is a challenge, but De La Mora says Mendez is facing all of the trials and tribulations of this life-changing series of events like a champion.

"I'm incredibly amazed by the resilience and strength of this woman, she is tiny but mighty," she said. "Ask how many times I've seen her complain, or cry from the pain? None. It kind of puts things in perspective, right?"

De La Mora has created a go fund me account for the community to help Mendez and her children. She has an 11-year-old-son and two daughters – 16 and 8 years old – who attend Radford City Schools.

"Areli has three children, as a single mom she has already seen her share of suffering and has singlehandedly kept a roof over her kids heads, food on the table and always a job, always working," said De La Mora in the Go Fund Me description. "She lives like many of us, paycheck to paycheck. Aside from medical bills, she also has rent to pay, utilities, and all the bills that are coming her way."

"Areli is the epitome of putting her children first, excellent work ethic, tackling every obstacle that has been in front of her every single time," she continued. "If you find it in your heart to help her and her children, please contribute any way you can. One dollar at a time, one share at a time, we can show her and her children that we care and they're not alone. There is nothing we can possibly do, to right this tragedy, but we can certainly help her give her peace of mind that she won't lose her place because she didn't pay rent. Or she won't be able to provide for her children. Let's prove her how much she matters!"

VT geosciences study shows Triassic fossils that reveal origins of living amphibians

The smallest of newly found fossils can upend what paleontologists know about our history.

A team of paleontologists from Virginia Tech and the U.S. Petrified Forest National Park, among others, have discovered the first "unmistakable" Triassic-era caecilian fossil — the oldest-known caecilian fossils — thus extending the record of this small, burrowing mammal by roughly 35 million years. The find also fills a gap of at least 87 million years in the known historical fossil record of the amphibian-like creature.

The fossil was first co-discovered by Ben Kligman, a doctoral student in the Department of Geosciences, part of the Virginia Tech College of Science, at Arizona's Petrified Forest National Park during a dig in 2019. Named by Kligman as Funcusvermis gilmorei, the fossil extends the history of caecilians 35 million years back to Triassic Period, roughly 250 million to 200 million years ago.

Prior to this new study, published recently in the journal Nature, only 10 fossil caecilian occurrences were known, dating back to the Early Jurassic Period, about 183 million years ago. However, previous DNA studies estimated evolutionary origins of caecilians back to the Carboniferous or Permian eras, some 370 million to 270 million years ago, according to Kligman, marking that 87-million-year gap. However, no such fossils had been found.

"The discovery of the oldest caecilian fossils highlights the crucial nature of new fossil evidence. Many of the biggest outstanding

Slim Randles: Home Country of Windy Wilson, Dud Campbell, and computers, clouds, a mouse, and apps

Wellsir ... ol’ Dud did ‘er again, he shore ‘nuf did. This here’s Alphonse Wilson, known around these parts as Windy Wilson, esquire, LTD and DDT at your service as always. Free to you and worth every blessed dime.

See ... t’other day I got into a little chat with Dud Campbell, and he says to me that I need to get me one a-them computers so I can be moderate like ever’body else. Had the nerve to just come out and say that!

Well, friend, that’s when I made a big mistake. I asked him what I needed to get the ol’ ball rolling and I should’ve shut ‘er down right then. Yessir, your ol’ pal Alphonse occasional makes mistakes.

Now you can dip my hat in sheep dip and paint

Mary Lou’s name on the barn with it if he didn’t obsolete hisself right into a foreign language!

Didn’t have nothin’ to write with, so here’s what he said, near as I recollect: I need a cloud, he said. A cloud stores stuff. Well ... shore it does! It stores rain!

But he said, no, a cloud isn’t in the computer, but floats around somewhere and you get to it by buying an app.

Wellsir, I ‘splained to Dud that apps are okay, but I’ve always pressurized my priorities ‘long Quarter horse lines. Told him them spots don’t make the horse go any faster. He started wavin’ his arms then, and said I get these apps with a mouse.

And he ‘spects me to believe that?!!!

Right!!

Had a app oncet. Nice big ol’ Appaloosa he was, too. But ugly? I was tellin’ Dud about him. Them apps today are pretty horses, but back when I was younger, they all looked like they needed to pull manure carts. It’s a fact.

Why, this old pony I had ... I hate to admit this ... but his ol’ head was the size of a door, and you could stick his butt in a bottle!

So I think I’ll mebbe just use the computer down at the library for a while. Nice girl down there helps me out with it.

And you can tell ‘em I said so.

Say thank you to the nice girl down at your library who helps old guys with the computer, will you?

and preservation of Black history, stories, and sites of cultural significance in Southwest Virginia is a recommitment to racial and economic justice on this side of the great Commonwealth.” said Sanchez.

Since 2017, CI,Inc. has raised approximately $300,000 towards the historic preservation and rehabilitation project of the Long Building. In 2020, these funds were used to repair and restore the entire roof system on the historic structure.

In 2020-2021, CI, Inc. partnered with Hill Studio to acquire an updated Master Site Plan. This work included hosting a series of community stakeholder questions in paleontology and evolution cannot be resolved without fossils like this,” said Kligman, who previously discovered a 220-million-year-old species of cynodont or stem-mammal, a precursor of modern-day mammals.

“Fossil caecilians are extraordinarily rare, and they are found accidentally when paleontologists are searching for the fossils of other more common animals,” said Kligman. “Our discovery of one was totally unexpected, and it transformed the trajectory of my scientific interests.”

The discovery of the fossils was made in 2019 by Kligman and Petrified Forest National Park student intern Xavier Jenkins, now a Ph.D. student at Idaho State University, while the duo was processing fossiliferous sediment from the park’s nicknamed Thunderstorm Ridge via a microscope. Fungusvermis was found in a layer of the Chinle Formation dated to approximately 220 million years ago, when Arizona was positioned near the equator at the central part of the supercontinent Pangaea, Kligman said.

“Seeing the first jaw under the microscope, with its distinctive double row of teeth, sent chills down my back,” Kligman said. “We immediately knew it was a caecilian, the oldest caecilian fossil ever found, and a once-in-a-lifetime discovery.”

Modern caecilians are limbless amphibians with meetings and listening sessions designed to gather community feedback about the potential reuses of the Long Building and historic campus properties.

The Edgar A. Long Building will rehouse the ‘Christiansburg Institute Museum & Archives (CIMA), an immersive museum highlighting the 100-year story of Christiansburg Industrial Institute and that reinvestigates the experiences of African Americans in Southwest Virginia from Slavery to Civil Rights.

The building features a research center, a makerspace podcast studio, collaborative work units, leasable offices, a commercial-grade kitchen, and a large flexible cylindrical bodies with a compact, bullet-shaped skull that helps them burrow underground. Now exclusively home to South and Central America, Africa, and southern Asia, caecilians spend their lives burrowing in leaf-litter or soil searching for prey such as worms and insects. This underground existence has made studying caecilians difficult for scientists. Kligman, tongue in cheek, describes modern caecilians as an “eyeless sock puppet with the body of a worm.”

Now, here’s the fun part: The genus name ‘Fungusvermis’ was inspired by the Ohio Players’ 1972 song “Funky Worm” from their album Pleasure, a favorite song of the authors that was often played while excavating fossils at Thunderstorm Ridge. ‘Fungus’ is derived from the Latinized form of the English word Funky for the upbeat, rhythmic form of dance music, while ‘vermis’ is derived from the Latin word for worm. (It’s an excellent song, by the way. Instant earworm, so to speak.)

“As the eponymous song says, it’s the funkier worm in the world,” quipped Adam Marsh, the project’s lead paleontologist.

“Since its discovery in 2017, the Thunderstorm Ridge site has produced a diverse assemblage of over 60 animals ranging from freshwater sharks to dinosaurs,” Kligman said. “Several other new species discovered at this site have been recently described. Many other new species from this site are currently under study and will be published in upcoming years.”

In other words, fully expect more unspooling of what paleontologists know about the history of fossils.

community event space. The site plan includes an outdoor amphitheater, large open green spaces for events and recreational activities, memorial gardens, and an interpretive legacy trail.

CI, Inc., is a grassroots cultural heritage and historic preservation 501(c)3 nonprofit organization located in Montgomery County with a mission of education and intergenerational empowerment, and the responsible stewardship of African American history, stories, and culture in Southwest Virginia.

Another record high: Virginia Tech receives more than 47,000 applications for fall 2023

For the third straight year, the number of first-year applications for admission to Virginia Tech rewrites the record books. President Tim Sands shared the news during his State of the University address on Jan. 18 at the Moss Arts Center.

A historic high 47,128 first-year applications were submitted for fall 2023 admission - an increase of 4.4 percent over the previous record of 45,124 set a year ago. First-year applications have increased 47 percent since 2018, shortly after major changes were implemented in the admissions process.

This is the strongest applicant pool in the school’s history when measured by academics. The average GPA of all 2023 applicants is 4.06, compared to 4.0 in 2022.

Noteworthy gains include a 5 percent increase in applicants identified as first-generation college students. Gains also were achieved across every underrepresented and underserved group. Black or African American applications surpassed the 2022 mark by 5 percent. Applications from Hispanic/Latino students realized a 9 percent increase while Native American applications rose 14 percent.

“Three record years of first-year applications continue to affirm that the transformational changes made in 2018 have made Virginia Tech a top destination for students,” said Juan Espinoza, associate vice provost for enrollment management and director of undergraduate admissions. “Our innovative recruitment strategy continues to find ways to connect students to the university with a strong focus on access and affordability.”

In 2018, Virginia Tech put into effect changes in its admissions process including the development of a more holistic review process and the introduction of a shared application platform, the Common Application. In addition, Virginia Tech began collecting self-reported academic information and streamlined the fee waiver application process. These changes resulted in a larger, higher quality, and more diverse pool of applicants seeking admission to Virginia Tech.

Early Decision applications jumped by 17 percent for 2023. Early Decision is recommended for first-year applicants who have strong academic qualifications, select Virginia Tech as their first-choice school, and intend to enroll if admitted.

“Great things are happening at Virginia Tech and students are attracted to the impact that Virginia Tech is having,” said Espinoza. “We can’t wait to welcome the Class of 2027.”

Admission decisions for those who applied for early action will be announced in late February. Regular decision applicants will be notified in early March. Early decision applicants were notified in December.

Applicants who have been accepted to Virginia Tech will have until May 1 to respond. Students seeking to transfer to Virginia Tech for the summer or fall sessions will have until March 1 to apply. For more dates and deadlines, visit the Admissions section on vt.edu.

Tech women’s basketball player out for blood

Jimmy Robertson
VT Athletics

When it comes to basketball, Ashley Owusu never has been afraid to roll up her sleeves and get to work.

But these days, the Virginia Tech women’s basketball standout is encouraging teammates, students, friends, and those in the local community to roll up their sleeves for a different and more important reason.

Owusu serves as an ambassador for the American Red Cross, an organization primarily known for collecting blood to be used in medical facilities throughout the world. January is National Blood Donation Month, and Owusu is using her platform as a college athlete to share her story in a video promoting the importance of giving blood.

“I’ve always known what the Red Cross was about — donating blood — but I never really knew how much of an impact blood donors can have and how important it is,” Owusu said. “So I thought it was pretty cool, especially with the story.”

“The story” took place last year when Owusu competed as a women’s basketball player at the University of Maryland before transferring to Virginia Tech. Toward the end of the season, she felt poorly and extremely fatigued.

Maryland participated in the NCAA Women’s Tournament last March and played Stanford in a Sweet 16 matchup in Spokane, Washington. The team left several days in advance of the game, and while there, Owusu’s symptoms grew worse.

“I started feeling sick, was sleeping a lot, wasn’t really eating, and then after we lost to Stanford, I got home, and I was feeling a lot worse,” Owusu said. “I was super sick, had a temperature, wasn’t eating, my throat was swollen, and my parents took me to the hospital.”

The doctors ultimately diagnosed her with mononucleosis, a virus that often leads to extreme fatigue. Tests revealed Owusu’s hemoglobin levels (iron) in her blood to be dangerously low, and doctors ordered a blood transfusion.

Usually one blood transfusion takes care of iron-deficiency anemia, a condition in which blood lacks the healthy red cells needed to carry oxygen throughout the body. Owusu’s iron levels fell so low that she needed eight transfusions.

The Woodbridge, Va., native, who transferred to Virginia Tech over the summer and is pursuing a degree in religion and culture, is convinced that the blood transfusions saved her life. That motivated her to get involved with the American Red Cross.

“I always knew what it was, but I never really looked into it, never really donated blood,” Owusu said. “Once that [her sickness] happened, I just got more serious about it. During that time, my aunt had actually told me there was a shortage of blood donations, so I thought it’d be pretty cool to try to shine some light on it.”

A camera crew came to Blacksburg to get video of Owusu and to capture her story as to why she wanted to be an ambassador for the American Red Cross.

Ashley Owusu needed blood transfusions to overcome an illness last spring, and now she’s using her platform as a college athlete to encourage others to donate blood to the American Red Cross.

Owusu, her parents, and the person who handles her name, image, and likeness (NIL) opportunities – NIL is a policy that allows college athletes to make money off sponsorships without repercussions from the NCAA – reached out to the American Red Cross about helping with the organization’s promotional efforts.

Organization officials listened to her story and were eager for her help. They put together a story about Owusu for the Red Cross website and a video about her for its YouTube channel.

“The stories of why blood donation is so important for people like Ashley are the reasons why people choose to donate,” said Jonathan McNamara, communications director for the American Red Cross of Virginia. “Her willingness to share her story and to be a public advocate on this topic is vital to our being able to reach new donors and hopefully inspire them to roll up their sleeves and give. It’s incredibly helpful to the organization and something we’re grateful for, both the opportunity we had to work with her and hopefully the opportunities we’ll have to work with her in the future.”

Both sides hope to continue the relationship. A former All-American at Maryland, Owusu already brings name recognition to the topic with her status as a college athlete. That name recognition could expand if she plays professional basketball in the WNBA, which, in turn, could benefit the American Red Cross.

“The more she has her name out there in the community, the more potential she has of expanding her audience,” McNamara said. “And we’re always grateful to introduce our story to audiences not only throughout Virginia, but across the country. Ashley’s role in that is one that we see as very important in the months and years to come.”

For now, Owusu’s focus remains more local as she spotlights the American Red Cross’s efforts to the Virginia Tech community. College populations tend to give blood more frequently, and Virginia Tech always has been involved with the organization’s efforts, hosting blood drives throughout the academic year.

Owusu wants to see those efforts continue. Her message to students is simple.

“Just look into it,” Owusu said. “I know some people may have a fear of seeing blood and stuff like that, but I think donating blood is a lot more important than we might think,” she said. “And I think it can save people’s lives in an instance. So just look into it and take it seriously.”

Owusu said she will help in any way possible, though she won’t be participating in National Blood Donation Month. Tech’s sports medicine staff wants her to wait until after the basketball season. Her past medical history and the basketball team’s combination of practices and games lead all parties to be cautious.

Owusu understands that and accepts it. She said she will wait until after the season.

At that point, she’ll be more than ready to roll up her sleeves for her passionate cause.
